THE BIG LOS ANGELES VICTORY

The completion of the count of the Los Angeles vote shows that Harriman polled a total of $3,000, and that Alexander's majority was less than 30,000.

This is what the socialists had to go up against at the last moment:

An Alexander campaign fund of $500,000, five daily papers, all of the saloon crowd, the entire slam vote, the entire red light district, the combined forces of the churches, and all that fed the set and their servants that make Los Angeles a pleasure resort; a sensational confession of the McNamara's pulled off at a time to stampede the people.

In the face of this combined force of vice linked up with religion, money, purchasing power, the Socialists polled more votes in the city than the party had in the entire state last year. If Harriman could have been elected before the McNamara confession, it would have been with non-Socialist votes. In this case his election would have been a greater calamity than his defeat. At this distance, we consider the Socialist vote in Los Angeles a great triumph for Socialism.

Harriman's vote is fire-fired, while a large part of those who voted for Alexander would not do it again without the same things happening, and the same money being used. This can never be done again. The work now before our comrades is to make party members out of their voters and, thus get ready for the next big battle—CALIFORNIA FOR SOCIALISM IN 1912.

McNamara Case Reviewed

by TERRY P. JENSEN

In California, the McNamara case stands out as a classic example of the power of a minority to sway public opinion. The case is an important lesson in understanding how public opinion can be shaped by a small number of influential individuals.

The McNamara case began in 1911, when a group of workers went on strike at the McNamara Brothers' shoe factory in Los Angeles. The strike was led by the California Industrial Workers of the World (IWW), a radical labor organization. The strike was fought against the McNamara Brothers, who were owners of the shoe factory.

The strike lasted for several months, during which time the workers were supported by a powerful coalition of unions and community activists. The McNamara Brothers employed a network of spies and informants to try to break the strike, but they were unable to do so.

In the end, the strike was successful, and the McNamara Brothers were forced to negotiate with the workers. The strike had a significant impact on the labor movement in California, and it helped to establish the IWW as a major player in the state.

The McNamara case is an important lesson in understanding how public opinion can be shaped by a small number of influential individuals. The McNamara Brothers were able to use their resources to influence public opinion, and they were able to win the support of the majority of the community. This allowed them to defeat the strike, and it helped to solidify their control over the shoe industry in Los Angeles.

Kentucky's Bloody Fight for Spoils and Its Sequel

The early part of the past month was devoted to the struggle for power in the State of Kentucky, as it is reported to us in the following paragraphs. The struggle is being fought between the Governor and the House of Representatives, and it is clear that the issue is one of power and control.

In the House of Representatives, the Governor and his supporters are holding the upper hand, and it appears that they are determined to carry out their plans regardless of the opposition. The Governor has been accused of using his influence to suppress the opposition and to keep the House from doing its duty.

The situation is serious, and it is feared that the State may be plunged into chaos if the Governor's machinations are not stopped. The people of Kentucky are watching the situation with anxiety, and it is hoped that a solution will be found that will satisfy both sides.

The issue is not mere politics, but a question of principle, and it is hoped that the people of Kentucky will rise to the occasion and demand a fair and just solution of the problem.

The Governor's supporters are well organized, and it is feared that they will be able to carry out their plans if the people are not vigilant.

It is hoped that the people of Kentucky will stand firm and demand a fair and just solution of the problem. The State cannot afford to be run by a dictator, and it is to the interest of all that the people rise to the occasion and demand a fair and just solution of the problem.
