Wall Street's Hope—Can He Come Back?

The world is waiting to see if any chance of a legislative program can be salvaged from the wreckage that has been done to the Senate. The hope is that Senator Burton can act as a catalyst to bring about a reunification of the Senate. The Republican Party has a strong interest in this outcome because it would mean a return to normalcy.

The situation in the House is less clear. There is some optimism that a workable budget can be passed, but the prospects for a major legislative program are dim. The Democrats have a stronger hand in the House than in the Senate, and they are determined to keep it that way.

The President is under pressure to take a more active role in the Senate, but so far he has been reticent. His advisors are divided on the question of whether he should intervene or let the Senate sort out its differences on its own.

The issue of budget cuts is one that is likely to dominate the legislative agenda in the coming months. The deficit is still high, and there is a growing sense of urgency to address it.

The President is expected to meet with congressional leaders in the coming weeks to discuss the budget and other issues. It remains to be seen whether he will be successful in rallying support for his policies.

In the meantime, the country is waiting for action. The public is frustrated with the lack of progress on key issues, and there is a sense of unease about the future of the country.
A R e a d e r  f o r  L i f e

The Appeal to Reason, Topeka, Kansas, December 30, 1911

HEARTLESS HUMMERS

The crowning of George and Mary at the White House was the event of the year. The nation was agog with the event. It was all that was expected of the great and the good. The distinguished guests were entertained at the hands of the President and Mrs. Wilson, who made the occasion memorable. The banquet was lavish and the entertainment was first-class. The guests included distinguished people from every part of the world. The President and Mrs. Wilson were in high spirits and the guests were equally so. The world was agog with the event. The nation was in high spirits. The event was the crowning of George and Mary.