Soldiers' Attack Helps Women

During World War I, the United States government took action to help women by enacting the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, granting women the right to vote. This was a significant moment in the fight for women's rights and equality. The amendment was passed on August 26, 1920, and it has since become an important symbol of progress in the struggle for women's rights.

In the early 20th century, women faced many challenges and setbacks in their efforts to gain equal rights and opportunities. However, the end of World War I marked a turning point, and the United States government played a crucial role in advancing women's rights.

The government's actions were driven by a combination of factors, including the tireless efforts of women's rights activists, the increasing political clout of women, and the changing social and economic conditions of the time. The government's commitment to women's rights was also influenced by the perceived need to support the war effort, as women were taking on new roles and responsibilities during the war.

Ultimately, the passage of the 19th Amendment was a significant achievement for women's rights in the United States. It marked the beginning of a new era of opportunity and equality for women, and it paved the way for further progress in the fight for women's rights in the years to come.

Aspen's Newsstand Edits

(Aspen is the newsstand edition of the former Aspen Bulletin. It is going with a whomping kick into the spring season with a new look, better paper and a better bound edition.)

Thoreau's advice to go "there is much to be done" at home is so timely that the editors of the Aspen Bulletin will indeed have much to do. The Bulletin is now in its third year and has been growing steadily in scope and quality. It is now being distributed to a wider audience than ever before. The editors are working hard to ensure that the Bulletin continues to meet the needs of its readers.

The Bulletin is available at all newsstands and bookstores in Aspen. For more information, please visit our website at aspenbulletin.com.
The press reports that Uncle Sam can't put the porch at the service of the farmer who wants to distribute food and other articles to the poor, even if all the poor have every need for food and other articles.
