Sinclair Sends Scorching Letter to Pampered Prince of Plutocracy

Makes Final Appeal to John D. Jr., to Settle Colorado Strike

In a letter to the editor of the Colorado Times, Sinclair wrote:

"...A letter to the editor of the Colorado Times...

Colorado Times

You are told, Mr. Rockefeller, that the strikers are ignorant foreigners, and cannot be controlled by any other method. Yet you have been shown, upon the instant that you cease from doing business in the district, those strikers who have been using the power that has been given them by the people of the United States to operate as newspapers and scientists, and who have been using the power to practice peaceful picketing at the doors of the oil fields. In this respect, there have been no known injuries to any one, and the strikers have been peaceable.

Peter Will Donald Justice.

The public understands that you are young, that you have not had much experience in handling strikers; the country will be patient with you, but if you continue your present course, you will be held responsible for the consequences. It is not because we desire to injure you, or to prevent you from doing what you think is right, that we write to you. We have long been engaged in the work of maintaining law and order, and we do not desire to see it disturbed. We want the strikers to remain where they are, and we want the oil fields to continue working.

"Lead Us Back to the Trails of Yesterday"

The public understands that we are not seeking to settle the strike, but only to prevent further violence. We have long been engaged in the work of maintaining law and order, and we do not desire to see it disturbed. We want the strikers to remain where they are, and we want the oil fields to continue working.

The letter was signed by several prominent citizens of Colorado, including John D. Rockefeller Sr., and was published in the Colorado Times. It was addressed to John D. Rockefeller Jr., the head of the Rockefeller family's oil empire, and urged him to intervene in the strike.
How Burns "Earned" $10,000 Fee

The case of the alleged murder of a man named Burns in Kansas City, Missouri, has been receiving considerable attention in the press. The story is one of murder, mystery, and the pursuit of justice.

John Burns was found dead in his room in the Kansas City Hotel, and the police were called to the scene. The investigation revealed that Burns had been the victim of a violent attack, and that he had died as a result of his injuries.

The police interviewed several witnesses, including a man named Johnson, who claimed to have seen Burns being attacked by two men. Johnson gave a detailed description of the attackers, and the police began to search for them.

The search was unsuccessful, and the police were forced to rely on other evidence in the case. The investigation revealed that Burns had been involved in a number of criminal activities, and that he may have had enemies.

The police were able to identify one of the attackers, a man named Smith, who had a record of previous convictions. Smith was arrested and charged with the murder of John Burns.

The trial of Smith was a long and drawn-out affair, and it was not until several months later that the case was brought to a conclusion. Smith was found guilty of the murder of John Burns, and he was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The case of John Burns has been an important one in the history of criminal justice, and it has served as a reminder of the importance of thorough investigation and the pursuit of justice in all cases.
An Interview Reviewed

As an interview with President Wilson, done by a Columbia journalist at the close of the Senate campaign, is remarkable for the independence and tone of the questions which were asked. The President's answers were in the main consistent with the views of the progressive party, and the interview, as a whole, is likely to be of great service in forming the minds of the people about what was said to the President in his campaign, and about the policy which he hopes to carry on in Congress.

The interview was conducted by Mr. W. H. S. King, who asked the President a number of questions on various subjects, and the President gave him a number of answers which are of interest to the people.

The first question was: "Mr. President, what is your plan for the immediate future?" The President replied: "I have no plan for the immediate future. I am going to see what the people want, and then I am going to do whatever they want me to do."

The second question was: "Mr. President, what is your plan for the long future?" The President replied: "I have no plan for the long future. I am going to do whatever the people want me to do, and I am going to see what the people want.

The third question was: "Mr. President, what is your plan for the future of the United States?" The President replied: "I have no plan for the future of the United States. I am going to see what the people want, and then I am going to do whatever they want me to do."
