Wage Workers!

If you would know the conditions under which you work, you must own the job, or you shall own none. Vote for Socialism on November 24th, and then you own the job.

Secretary of War Modifies His Order Against Scabies Giving Magazines Practically All They Want.

The action is perfectly logical on its face, but there is a reason behind it which makes it seem a little odd in this connection. The order, in effect, says that the government will not provide any magazines for officers or enlisted men except those approved by the War Department. The reasons given for this policy are that it is necessary to control the distribution of such materials in order to prevent any possibility of their misuse. However, it appears that the real reason for the order is to prevent the spread of scabies, a disease that is highly contagious. The order is set to expire in 30 days, after which the situation will be re-evaluated.

Ready for Another Clash

A direct appeal to the Secretary of War for a change in the policy regarding the distribution of magazines to military personnel has been made by the American Legion. The Legion claims that the present policy is unfair and discriminatory, and that it forces members of the armed forces to read only those magazines that are approved by the War Department. The Legion has threatened to file suit if the policy is not changed.

The World's Industry.

It is said that manufacturers to-day are not as busy as they were a few years ago. This is not true. The demand for goods is still as great as ever, but the methods of production have changed. The war has affected the industry in many ways.

The Appeal Army is an organization that seeks to educate people about the importance of industry.

SAUCETY

A new method of preserving food is being developed by a group of scientists. This method involves the use of a special type of film that preserves the food without the need for refrigeration. It has the potential to revolutionize the way we store and transport food.

What a Baby Would Hear if the World Could Talk

Written by ALLAN L. BENSON for the Appeal to Reason

WHEN a baby is born, he has only a few senses: sight, sound and touch. He can hear and he can see, and these are his main senses. He can feel the world around him, but he cannot see it. He can feel the world around him, but he cannot see it.

The world speaks to the baby in a language that he cannot understand. He cannot understand what the world is saying to him. He cannot understand what the world is saying to him.

Whenever you go you will find that the story of useful labor brings down upon you the world around you. It is a world of busy people, and they are all busy with their own business.

In a way, it is true that the world is not what you say it is. It is not what you say it is. It is not what you say it is.

But the world is not only what you say it is. It is also what you do. What you do is what you say it is. It is also what you do. What you do is what you say it is.

And if you are honest, you will say that the story of useful labor brings down upon you the world around you. It is a world of busy people, and they are all busy with their own business.

If you are honest, you will say that the story of useful labor brings down upon you the world around you. It is a world of busy people, and they are all busy with their own business.

And if you are honest, you will say that the story of useful labor brings down upon you the world around you. It is a world of busy people, and they are all busy with their own business.

But the world is not only what you say it is. It is also what you do. What you do is what you say it is. It is also what you do. What you do is what you say it is.

And if you are honest, you will say that the story of useful labor brings down upon you the world around you. It is a world of busy people, and they are all busy with their own business.
