This is democracy, pure and simple. As the party is growing quite rapidly at the present time it is well-that these differences be thoroughly threshed out in order that we may have a policy for future use, even if that policy would have to change to meet changing conditions.

use, even if that policy would have to change to meet changing conditions.

These wrangles and bickerings occur in every club, fraternal, social, church and peace societies in the world. All these organizations "preach peace and practice war." If they did not they would stagmate and would be completely dominated by self seeking individuals. We Socialists are just like other people. We have our likes and dislikes, we favor certain men or women for certain positions, we believe our views on certain subjects are right, and are, at times, disappointed that others cannot see things as we do. But for all our differences, and we want our critics to observe this, when it comes to getting out and working for the cause, distributing literature, selling tickets for our meetings, doing everything possible for our paper, and all the other duties that are done without thought of recompense or personal aggrandisement, these differences are laid aside and we are all united against the common cancer buildings and our places could and would be filled by better men.

The 57 varieties, the world over, are united upon "priving to each worker the full value of the product of other wrongs and crimes that are now perpitation or we say and because we are thus united we are hated and feared by the apptailst class.

dependent on them, and to society as whole.

The measure as well as the safety of civilized society depends upon he degree in which the masses of the people are civilized. In a rich society poverty is regarded as a stamp of inferiority and inefficiery, and its victims are barred from the enjoyment of the bleasings of civilization. They feel themselves outcasts, and as such released from those obligations which bind the really civilized man to the society, the benefits of which he enjoys.

The welfare of the working people and their progress in intellectual and moral culture ought to be the prime concern of society, but since the rulers of the world cannot see it in this light, the working people are compelled to
