Upton Sinclair in Realism and Production of His History-Making Play.

Upton Sinclair is a master in his own right, both in literature and dramatization. He is the author of his own historical novel, "The Jungle." This novel, which was written as a protest against the exploitation of the workers in the stockyards and meat-packing plants, has been translated into many languages and has sold millions of copies. The novel's realism and its vivid description of the working conditions in the stockyards have had a profound impact on public opinion and have led to significant reforms in the meat-packing industry.

Packing Judies

The difficulty in securing a jury in the Goliath and Stag cases, with the consequent cost to county court, has started an agitation for the abolition of juries.

Of course it is not put quite as badly as this. The proposed measures are designated as "reforms," but they strike at the vital point in the jolly system—the trial by jury. It is proposed to have professional jurors who shall be chosen by the jury commissioner, and these, it will be argued, will of course be more for the benefit of private interests. It is proposed to have professional jurors who shall be chosen by the jury commissioner, and these, it will be argued, will of course be more for the benefit of private interests.

Such a little knowledge of the methods by which juries are chosen at the present time will show this means.

With the names of those who will be chosen to sit as juries. The names of the choice will be chosen to sit as juries. The names of the choice will be chosen to sit as juries.

The composition of a single jury will show how this distortion of the commissions is exercised. The voter will be tempted to be at least in the case of clerks, small business men, and other workers. Manual workers in the choice of a choice of a worker will be held by these professional jurors.

But all this has the added fact that the original instrument is bound to have a large jury composed almost exclusively of the interests which are bound up with the employing class. It should be pointed out here that this is a gigantic scheme which would, of course, be at the disposal of powerful interests.

The composition of the jury is at the disposal of these powerful interests. It is not to the choice of the jury that this is left. It is to the choice of the jury that this is left.

Far be it for us to accept the idea of the jury being made up of a group of people who are not interested in the interests of the people who are bound up with the employing class. It is the work of the jury that is done by the jury. It is the work of the jury that is done by the jury.
