A Labor Day Parade

And Its Effect on the Merchants' Association.

If numbers count for anything, the parade of the unions Monday ought to have a good effect. Between twenty and thirty thousand men were in line. They conducted themselves like peace-loving citizens. They marched and countermarched through the streets and then went home to their families or repaired to the Mechanics' Pavilion to listen to the music and the speeches. There was no incendiarism, there was no drunkenness, there was no noise and fury. These men, organized to better their economic condition, deserve serious consideration at the hands of the capitalists. Suppose their passions were inflamed and they let loose the strength that is in them, how long would the three hundred and fifty men comprising the Merchant's Association withstand the onslaught? Yet the three hundred and fifty men, more or less, that are members of this secret organization of grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., practically control the destiny of those twenty thousand marchers. The three hundred and fifty can tell the twenty thousand how much they must work and how little, where they must work and what they will get for it. In other words, three hundred and fifty men, who spend more than half their time in clubs, surrounded by every luxury, producing not one jot of the world's wealth, can dictate to twenty thousand sturdy men, who produce and whose ancestors have produced practically all the wealth of the world with their labor power. These three hundred and fifty grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., can dictate to the twenty thousand marchers and say, unless you are willing to bend the knee and break up your union because we demand it, unless you are willing to work as many hours as we command and for what wages we are pleased to give, we will keep you from producing or distributing until you are starved and your wives and your children are starved. You may be peace-loving; you may walk under the protecting folds of the American flag, which theoretically guarantees you the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; you may repair to the Pavilion and have your ears split by doubtful oratory; but till you learn that all power can be expressed in economic terms; till you learn that the economic power in the machines which we possess and which you created, as long as you leave them in our hands, will give us strength and make you weak.

On election day you vote with us. Without the votes of you twenty thousand men who marched in the parade on Monday our candidates on the Republican or Democratic ticket could not be elected. And when you marchers did vote for our candidates on the Republican or the Democratic ticket, what did you get for it? A chance to yell victory and a chance to burn red fire. Why, we, the three hundred and fifty grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., comprising the Merchants' Association, gazed at you through our club windows as you went dancing by, cheering the very men we wished elected. We were much edified and amused. We wondered at your stupidity and we congratulated each other because you possessed it. And even this present difference, wherein we are determined to smash your unions and leave you defenseless so we may beat you, singly, into a position of slavery—even this difference wherein we import criminals and blacklegs to the city and pay them five times as much as we pay you, and wherein we have the police protect our criminals and blacklegs and break your heads—even this difference between us, wherein your interests are clearly shown to be opposed to ours, will not teach you. You will vote for our candidates next election, because you believe in the wages system; and when the next strike comes along you will be in exactly the same position you are today. You can parade, you can love peace, you can flock to hear your orators, but till those orators show you that a hasty peace cannot be patched up every election day and that the capitalist class and the working class are deadly enemies at the ballot-box as much as they are in a strike or a lockout, there is absolutely nothing, the three hundred and fifty grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., comprising the Merchants' Association, have to fear from you, even if you do turn out twenty thousand strong on the first Monday in September. A mob of your number is nothing unless they are organized on right lines. You can see how effective our organization is. You can see that, although we are only three hundred and fifty, more or less, because we started out to capture the government and did capture it, we can have laws passed to protect ourselves, and other laws passed that will leave you defenseless. We, the three hundred and fifty grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., comprising the Merchants' Association, never forget that we are a superior class. We put our millions, which you produced, it is true, but which we possess, under our feet, and make a pedestal, from which we can view you, struggling like so many ants in a hill. But that there was ever an affinity between the classes, that there was ever a time when our class and your class, the capitalist class and the working class, had interests and aims in common, we never could recognize. Perhaps from our superior height we could discern the line of demarcation, the dividing line between the classes, clearer than ever. We also saw the necessity for having you taught that there are no classes, especially on election day. We paid the people who teach this necessary delusion. It is with your money—you produced it, it is true, but we possessed it—that we pay these teachers. We also saw the necessity of teaching you that competition is necessary. Of course, we have long ago ceased to compete, but if you did not compete with each other for jobs, if you felt that in cooperation there is strength and life, we could not drive you as we do, we could not keep one-half the workingmen in the city idle, and with the idle ones keep you in fear and trembling lest we discharge you and give them your places.

However, as we said before, all power can be expressed in economic terms. You vote men into office who protect us in the possession of the machines, etc., you produce. You vote men into office who have for principles competition and vested rights. You vote men into office who believe in this capitalist system of exploitation. You vote men into office who believe in the wages system; and as long as you do there is not the least bit of fear on our part. You can march peaceably, you can wave the stars and stripes, you can love your families and your homes; but till the election returns show that the laboring class has learned a lesson and taken for its principles the things that are opposite to our principles we can rest us, we the 350 grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., comprising the Merchants' Association, in the luxurious clubs and drink champagne in perfect peace. We have a Mayor elected by you who will order out the police to do our fighting for us. If this is not sufficient the Governor, also elected by your votes, will order out the militia. The only serious consideration we have is for the time when you, the 20,000 marchers, in combination with your brother-workingmen, may wake up to the truth that the class war extends to the ballot-box, and you elect a man from your own class for Mayor and another for Governor, with principles opposed to ours. In fact, the only thing we, the 350 grocers, ship-chandlers, etc., comprising the Merchants' Association, really fear is the spread of class-conscious Socialism in your ranks. A parade of 20,000 or 200,000 really means nothing. It is the organization along right lines we fear—the organization to capture the government which protects us and the system that makes us possible.

When that organization is accomplished we will begin to consider your claims. When you give serious promise that you are really tired of wearing your lives out to keep us supplied with champagne and well-appointed clubs, yards, and liveried servants, perhaps we may think it time to get in and do some actual work for our living. Then, too, we may not have the blue-coated police at our back as now, for

Record of the Century.

AN EXCELLENT SUMMARY OF THE INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS OF THE AGE OF CAPITALISM.

The old-time labor-saving machine for power and time and labor-saving machinery is one of the principal facts of the century. In raising wheat, from breaking the ground to sacking the grain, one hour with modern machinery will accomplish as much as 11 hours with the old-time plow, sickles, flails, etc. Four men with the aid of machinery can plant, raise, harvest, mill and carry to market wheat enough to supply with bread one thousand people for a year.

To shell 200 bushels of corn by hand takes 95 hours of labor time; with machinery one hour is enough. To make a plow by hand took 118 hours, with a labor cost of $5.34; with machinery now, a plow is made in 33.4 hours, at a labor cost of 79 cents. To build a standard platform road wagon with two movable seats and a leather dashboard takes 55.3 hours of labor time with machinery, against 204.1 hours with the old hand tools; and the labor cost with machinery is $8.48 against $43.07 with hand work.

The making of a bar of soap in the early years of the century took twentyfold the labor that is required today. The labor cost of making 25,000 pounds of lard soap is $3.25 now, against $43.20 in former years. A McKay machine enables one workman to sole 300 to 600 pairs of shoes a day, while he could handle but five or six pairs in a day by former methods. The ruling of 100 reams of single sheet writing paper with faint lines on both sides required 4,800 hours with ruler and quill in 1819, while with the modern ruling machine the work is more accurately and uniformly done in 25/3 hours with full allowance for foreman's time, at a cost of r.80 to r.1 in favor of the modern method.

A good compositor will set six or eight thousand ems in a ten-hour day by hand, while a linotype he will set 50,000 to 70,000 ems in the same time. A modern printing press with the help of five men will do the work of 3,000 to 4,000 persons. Franklin printed his paper on a little press with a big lever pulled down by hand for each impres- sion. Now, 25 persons, and two impression men, can do the same work in one hour.

What would he think if he could see one of our giant steam cylinder presses printing, folding, cutting, pasting and counting 70,000 to 80,000 papers an hour? Two persons handle the old-fashioned machine, fold and gather the sheets for 1,000 pamphlets of thirty-two pages, each in 7.6 minutes, while with a hand press and hose former 25 hours were needed—197 to 1 in favor of modern machinery. The total time consumed in making and printing the pamphlets was 21 times as great by former methods as at present. The labor cost of printing and binding 12,000 32-page pamphlets, with the aid of modern machinery, is 14 cents against $7.10 by former methods.

A Word of Encouragement from the Brewers.

The "Brauer-Zeitung," official organ of the United Brewery, Workmen says about the convention at Indianapolis: "Well done! It took time, but it has been accomplished as at present. The labor cost of printing and binding 3,000 pamphlets, with the aid of modern machinery, is 14 cents against $7.10 by former methods.

Comrades and Readers: Patronize those business houses that advertise in ADVANCE. By doing so you will help your paper.

Unity is now issued. During the convention it was manifest that the desire for unity is definitely felt, that there are no insignificant obstacles and a few days of negotiations, marked by a spirit of fraternity and identity of interests, that was accomplished for which thousands of toilers had been waiting.

Comrades with us all brewery workers, who already recognize the existence of the class-struggle, cheer the accomplished consolidation with enthusiasm. The work can now be carried on with greater energy. We ourselves are now going among our members and teach them the principles of Socialism without being handicapped by factional disputes. And also the Socialist Labor Party, which did not accept the invitation to the unity convention will, with the development of events come out from its separate corner and labor with the other class-conscious proletarians of this country at the sacred work for the ultimate emancipation of the oppressed ones. And now, comrades, cheer with us the new united party, because this struggle, in which all forces are needed, do your share of duty in order to abolish this system of oppression and slavery, of falsehood and deceit, and establish instead a society where there will be need for the full product of his labor, equality and fraternity will reign ever.

The Workers' Paradise!

Comrade: I, a Social Democrat, was told before leaving England that New Zealand was the 'worker's paradise.'

Well, after walking about the streets of Wellington, a fertile and not finding work, I put myself on the Government unemployment books—was sent up country with others on bush-felling and road-making work. They made us pay our own fares, make us pay for our axes, and charge us 2s. a week for the use of grindstone.

On this job there were powerful men working like niggers; talk about white slavery in England, let them come out here. To produce the wooden work, 8 men could not make it pay at the price the Government gives—it is all piecework and sweating.

The delusion is here: People at home do not distinguish between the nominal wages and the real wages. The worker here receives more in cash, but really is high, food is dear, clothes cost about 50 cents more, and iron-ware is about double the price one pays in England.

I expected too much. Generally the people are a lot of stuck-up jingo prigs, and they seem to have gone crazy simply because two royal paurpers have taken it into their heads to pay Wellington a visit. Really, the people in New Zealand seem to be as just as silly as those at home. There is a true democratic spirit; it is the old scrum style. The working men are the top dog. About the only people who gave me real sympathy and help were a few Socialists, and it heals many a heartache to find, so far from home, comrades in the grand old cause.—London Justice.

Since Hanna's agent has taken control of the government, there have been 87 strikes, with 500,000 men all told, while in the majority of cases wages have been reduced from 10 to 20. The big capitalists, as usual, have patronized by the factories where the strikes have been, increased from 30 to 50 per cent. I am glad the boys got what they voted for—good thing to get what you want, you know.

Who Own the Public Libraries?

"Wealth vs. Commonwealth" has been on file in the public library here in Riverside for a number of years. Recently it has been thrown out. By investigation it has been discovered that one A. J. Everett, a wealthy resident of this place, has stated that the book reflected on him personally, and that it was a disgrace to him and his children. We shall try to find out just what he means, and shall, as we shall try and find out if any one person, on account of being wealthy, has the power to tamper with a public library.

How Non-union Men Are Secured.

This letter was received by Conrade Q. Pat- ten of Trenton, New Jersey, a member of the Machinists' Union, and is only a sample of thousands of others that have received:

"New York, Aug. 27, 1901.

"Dear Sir: If you and your friends who are first-class mechanics go to San Francisco, Calif., under one year's contract, and are not afraid to take a striker's place, though no trouble is at hand, I will assign you to the work. As a guarantee of good faith on our part, we furnish two-thirds of the travel, and as a guarantee of good faith on your part, we ask that you pay one-third of the expenses of the trip, which will be refunded to you in six months."

"You shall come before Saturday prepared to leave on short notice."

Respectfully,

A State Convention.

Los Angeles, Calif., Aug. 28, 1901.

Editor "Advance": At the last business meeting of Local Los Angeles S. P., an initiative was taken for a State convention to be held at Los Angeles, October 10th and 20th. The initiative has been sent to different locals in Southern California for seconds.

It will be seen from this prompt action that the Los Angeles comrades desire the coming convention to be held in their city. They recognize that a town in the central part of the State would be preferable as a meeting place if there were a town of like size and character.

But since there is not, and as San Francisco has had several conventions, they feel that Los Angeles deserves the honor. But if the comrades of the State at large show by their votes that they wish the convention to be held elsewhere than in the Angel City, our comrades here will cheerfully acquiesce.

Fraternally yours, W. A. COREY, Organizer.

Notes from the South.

Los Angeles, Sept. 3, 1901.

Editor "Advance": Union between the two factions of Socialists in this city was effected on August 30th. Temporary officers were elected to serve until after the State Convention. The feeling of good will and comradeship was so strong that the business of planning and talking about the two factions was finished. To finish up, Comrade Spring addressed our first "united" propaganda meeting on the subject of "Unity." We are regularly sending speakers to Saw-telle and Long Beach. The comrades report excellent meetings, large crowds standing for two hours on street corners, eagerly taking it all in, and then further showing their interest by buying literature.

Now that we are united, we shall use all our energy in propaganda work. As Comrade Spring said, "Los Angeles shall know what Socialism is, whether it will or not." Last Saturday two street meetings were held at the same time. Both were successful, we intend to repeat the program every Saturday night.

The procession on Labor Day was very interesting. Altogether, about forty-five unions were represented. When the regis- tering was done, the spectacle was both interesting and sad; interesting, because it showed the power and force of the laboring men; and sad, because it showed their stupidity in not uniting as it was done in their parades where a soul, at least if the words on their banners were the expression of the men's thoughts, for high above the heads of the men all could see the words, "Workingmen of all countries, unite!"; and "Strike at the ballot-box."

It seems that the work of some comrades in the unions is beginning to tell. Let us hope so, for Comrades Biddle and Wheeler have given the energy to educate the men to this point. If this only would "Strike at the ballot-box," and strike in the right direction, how soon they would have what "drones now appropriate!"

Yours for the cause,

OLGA WIRTHSCHEFT.

Open Letter to Tillman & Bendel.

Gentlemen: I have received from you three copies of your publication, "Think It Over," and I must say I think it possesses precious little merit. Your absurd attempt to show that the interests of employer and employee are mutual makes me smile. You get out of your vapid and only partially employed amount of money, the greatest possible amount of labor. This largely accounts for your present wealth and its prospective increase, which you are striving for, will depend upon following up this policy—getting a little more aggressive as you get stronger and they get weaker. On the other hand, they are striving to get out of you the greatest possible amount of money for the least possible amount of service. And this estate can in no way be shaped to your mutual interests. Not as long as the relation of employer and employee exists as at present. You and they represent two opposing forces, and the conflict will go on until one or the other is subdued, or rather until the present social system is so changed that both will be eliminated, and a true mutual interest be established. That will involve the passing away of not only the Merchants' Assoc- iation, but of all the present half-formed, but well-meant labor system, and the interest of labor. In short, competition must die, and cooperation must succeed it. Capital, rent, interest and profit, are a quartet of curses, and the new civilization must provide for their rapid extinction. Then only can the race progress. And is it not, Messrs. T. & B., our duty, you as a prominent wholesale firm, and I as an obscure country merchant, to as- sist in ending the wretched chaos that exists, by working for the establishment of a society, with all others of our class, for a better society, where each one of us, capitalist and employee, mer- chant and customer, will join hands to pro- mote love, justice, and universal brotherhood, and in truth and honor establish the true Socialism to you, that your eyes may be open- ed as mine have been, and that we may get started on the right road to the correct solution of the difficulties that are crying out for a humane, sensible, practical, and therefore scientific, method for their adjustment.

Respectfully,

D. T. Loofbourrow.

What Every Woman Should Know.

If you are a housekeeper, too worried and busy to find room for a thought (or time for a house- keeper's mind), I suggest you put your house- work in every possible way that you may find time to realize this one statement—that your lot, more than anybody else, will be made easier and pleasanter under Socialism. Open your house to neighbors in order to get over this matter with them. Avoid gossip and talk about petty household affairs. If you have any one near you who is interested in Socialism and knows anything about it, ask ques- tions and do as much repeat as you can. Recommend to your neighbor or your children. It will fix the matter in your mind to do this, for we never know how little we understand a subject until we try to tell some one else about it. If you are a shop or factory girl, a clerk or a book-keeper, or have any similar work, learn yourself and teach your associate that your interests and hers are identical with those of every other hand and brain worker in the world, no matter what nationality, colour, or sex. Learn to look upon all other workers as comrades, and neither scorn nor envy them. Remember that you need their help and that they need yours to liberate the working class from slavery. You are all one, and thankful for your opportunity and teach history to the young people under your care, not from the capitalist standpoint, but from the standpoint of the class-conscious wage-worker; teach that you can do better, to be de- sired than great riches; teach lofty aims and ideals instead of the principles of commercial- ism. Teach that we are not here to make profit out of our fellow-creatures, but to love and mutually serve each other. Among your fellow-teachers, arouse a senti- ment in favor of free text-books, free lunches, free clothing, less wasteful methods of edu- cation, consolidated school for the rural dis- tricts, free transportation, and the like.

There is work for all, whatever talent or abil- ity you may possess, and to the limit of your enthusiasm and endurance. Work in the way that suits you best, by talking, singing, speaking, writing or thinking, only remember the three indispensable principles of International Socialism which are to be mastered and never forgotten.

These are:

1. Economic Determinism—that people are molded by the conditions which surround them; hence we must provide the best condi- tions possible to every human being, giving each one equal opportunities for education and development.

2. The law of surplus value. If each human being could be alone, with only such tools as he could make, to produce things he needs, he could barely produce enough to keep himself alive. By working together with improved machinery, each worker produces a large surplus value over and above what he needs to keep himself alive. This surplus is now taken from him by the capitalist class; we propose to abolish that class and let each worker keep for himself and his loved ones the surplus he has produced over and above his needs.

3. The Class Struggle—that the only way we can free the working people from their de- pendence and furnish the perfect conditions for their development is by combining them as a class into an organized movement to be led by those who have been trained in another founded upon Equity and Justice.

The Political Power.

Who exercises the political power? A scanty minority whom birth and wealth have made their leaders. The great majority of the people are absolutely helpless, and, because helpless, also without rights, for a right to which the power of enforcement is not attached is only a picture, a play, a misleading fancy. Yet that meaning, for example, has the right to choose a legislative representative, who can only speak but cannot exercise the slightest influence on the government of the land? The governing minority rules for itself, not for the subject majority. Between rulers and ruled is no right of association, no interest as between the plantation owner and the negro slave. The interest of the negro does not come in question for the plantation owner; his own interest is determinative for him, and not the interest of his interest demands. Just so in the present: social state. The interest of the people does not come in question, but exclusively the interest of the ruling minority.

To make the interests of the ruled subservient to the interests of the rulers is the foundation and purpose of rule—is the meaning of ruling. Social democracy, the rulers and ruled it must be so, for rule is by its very nature exploitation. It follows therefrom that the interests of the subject people demand the transformation of the state from its foundation, according to that line of necessity, to the preservation of a few persons of position and class and must become the possession of the citizen with full and equal rights, of whom no one rules over the other, and none will be ruled by another.

For this the social democracy strives. In place of the present class rule we will institute a free government of the people.—Wilhelm Liebknecht.

Request for Immediate Contributions.

"To Comrades of California:

"By referendum vote the comrads of California decided to send Comrades Roche and Ryan to the Indianapolis Convention. Owing to entire lack or financial provision for sending delegates, Comrade Roche did not go. Money was advanced by a Comrade in Los Angeles in order to join in the Convention; and upon this loan there is now due about $80. To pay this indebtedness, incurred for California representation in the Convention, the California State Executive Committee is throwing in $200, and is making immediate call for contributions. We suggest the circulation of a subscription list among comrades and sympathizers in your vicinity. A prompt response to this appeal is earnestly requested.

The Fight in Redlands.

Local Redlands is doing finely. We now have 50 members in good standing, which is certainly good for a town of 6,000 inhabitants, and, in proportion to San Francisco and Los Angeles population, is phenomenal. Our members knew how to stand their ground and determined to work for the emancipation of the proletarian. This is quite a unique town. There is practically no middle class, and consequently the Democratic Party is almost nil, as that reactionary crowd can only exist in communities where the small capitalist is in evidence. There they flourish like the green bay tree. In Redlands the fight is between the capitalist and proletarian and it will be fought on strict class lines. We held two street meetings lately, on Thursday and Saturday last, and notwithstanding the fact that we were hampered on Thursday by two evangelists, and on Saturday by the Salvation Army, who kept on till 9 o'clock before we got chance, the crowds remained with us. As a result of our meetings five workmen put in their application and expressed their willingness to battle with the proletarian revolution for the emancipation of the class. The Social Democratic Leagues is putting up $1,000 and the town and the boys are determined not to rest until we have a hundred members in good standing. On Friday next I got to East High- lands to deliver a talk and hope to organize a Branch of the Local. I was there until 5 o'clock, and here for a street meeting on Saturday night again. San Bernardino is also on deck and between us we will thoroughly organize the county for militant Socialism of the true class struggle kind, and without compromise or truck- ling. Let the chips fly or hit whom they may. Down with all capitalism, whether straight or diluted. We know them for our enemies and those who are not with us are against us. Should the law or should the rule is on, the lines are clearly drawn. The red banner of revolt is raised, never to be lowered or trailed in the dust, until the worker is free and the capitalist is no more.

GEORGE S. HOLMES.
Organizer, San Bernardino Co.

Education.

At present education is the privilege of a few, and for this few it is not a training for humanity but a preparation to exercise class rule. The great majority of the population receive only a shamefully perverted and insufficient education and are systematically hindered in the development of their talents, since an educated people, a truly well-bred, cultured people, would not bear patiently the present tyrannous political and social condition. For education, true education—not the systematic perversion and doggish breaking-in that today is pleased to boast the name of education—is the mother of freedom, justice and equality, and therefore not consistent with the existence of the present state. Social democracy would provide the highest education for each and all, free instruction in the best possible common and high schools (polytech- nical, professional and grammar schools, academies and universities). It proceeds from the bottom, because it is the duty of every one to care for the physical and spiritual welfare of its members. The socialistic state is therefore in its foundation a great universal educational in- stitution.—Wilhelm Liebknecht.

The Wages of a Slave.

Workingmen and Fellow Wage Slaves: If the rations your masters give you in return for the labor and health you are piling up for them, have been sufficient to enable you to indulge in the process of thinking, try and answer these few questions:

What is the difference between you and the chattel slave before the war?

Do you possess any more at the end of a year than they, who had only food, clothing and shelter given them, in return for the work performed?

Do they not have the advantage of you in case of sickness?

Were they always in such mortal fear of losing their jobs as you?

Have you any more liberty than they, except one day out of every 365, when you march to the polls, and cast your ballot to perpetuate your slavery?

Do you know that society is composed of but two classes, the master class and slave class? Is not the slave class in the majority?

Why, then, do you not strike for your liberty, by voting yourselves into power?

As both the Republican and Democratic parties are working for the interests of the master class, is it not silly in you to support their candidates?

Don't you know that the Socialist Party is the only political party that is representing your interests?

This being so, why don't you support it with your vote?

Can you not see that the Socialists are struggling for you, championing your cause, devoting their whole lives in fighting for your emancipation, and your friends who are in return only sullen indifference—are you stones, and not men, that their appeals to you go unheeded? Workingmen, fellow wage slaves, so long slumbering in ignorance and poverty, arouse yourselves, strike for independence! By independent political action only can you free yourselves. Join the Socialist forces and by thus welding yourselves into a class-conscious, disciplined and compact body, if you want and how to do it, you will move forward with a force as irresistible as the tides of the ocean.

The crumbling walls of this tottering old competitive system will be swept into oblivion, and labor will at last reap the reward.

JOHN MURRAY, JR.

Students of the University of California turned in today and broke the tie-up in shipping along the water front. A dozen strong, the college men boarded the brig "William G. Irwin," which has been unable to get away on account of the strike, and began to unload her cargo of lumber.

Among the party of abettors who went are several members of college fraternities. Their names are: Oscar Sheffled, Sigma Chi; B. T. Rowland, Taylor McLean, Cleve Baker, Zeta Psi; William Childs, Robert Ritchia, Jr., F. H. Moore, K. R. Balfoun, Sigma Alpha Epsilon. With them worked a gang of twenty-five Roumanian longshoremen from San Francisco.

The students claim that they do not want to injure the cause of unionism, but wanted to earn a little pocket money. They were offered $5.75 a day and engaged to work until next Saturday night.

It is being asked, "Where do the Socialist stand in relation to the strike?" To this we answer that the organized movement in this country, as well as all over the world, sympathizes with the strikers and assists them by all means in its power. All men acknowledge that this is a battle between Capital and Labor, a division which leaves the Socialist no choice but to take up the battle on the side of the laborer.

The thinking man, be he Socialist or not, must perceive that the course of unionism has an ever-increasing tendency to draw together the wage workers of all trades and occupations. Just as striking sickness the movement of amalgamation and solidarity, teaches the workers their dependence upon one another and the utter uselessness of appealing to the capitalist. Once comprehending the meaning of this class-struggle the worker becomes an uncompromising Socialist, ready to enter the political field and force the power from the capitalist class.

So much for the general situation, and now for the local incident above cited—of genteel seafaring. When men go out on strike they risk losing the bread and butter for their families. These college students know this and cannot plead ignorance. Now we can place the boys in one of two categories, either they believe their interests are with the Capitalist class, in which case they are in duty bound to assist in starving the men into submission, or else they simply desire to take advantage of the men's necessities to "turn an honest penny."

These young gentlemen are sons of bankers, real-estate agents, small merchants and the like, and have learned, from close contact with their fathers' business, that the time to make money out of their neighbors is when they are in trouble. At home they have become familiar with these little maxims:

A satisfactory mortgage can best be drawn when the farmer's crops have failed.

A widow and her corner lot can be more easily separated immediately after her husband's death than at any other time.

Adulterated food cannot be refused by customers who are deep in debt.

Knowing these truisms and desiring to "earn a little pocket money," the boys follow in the footsteps of their fathers. All of which goes to prove how absurd it is to assert that a college education unfitts boys for mercantile life.—People's Paper.

"This, at any rate, the Conference has made abundantly clear: that the S. D. F. adheres to the old policy and tactics which it has hitherto pursued; that it is not prepared to abandon any means which can be made use of to attain its end; that it is not prepared to sacrifice any principle for temporary advantage, but that it is prepared to adapt its tactics to time and circumstance; that it is prepared to use armed force when it shall assist in the realization of its object; that it seeks the unity and consolidation of the working class, and not its division and discord; and that, while it refuses to bind itself hand and foot by alliance with any party which is not definitely committed to the principles of class war and insurrection, it also refuses to isolate itself from the active political life of today, or to antagonize any section of the working class which, though not yet class-conscious, is slowly and painfully, and even unintentionally, growing to the light."—Editorial comment in London Justice on the Conference of the Social Democratic Federation.

The Truth from a Master.

In a municipality, which is a state within a state, the subordination of the subject majority to the special interests of the ruling minority stands out more plainly than in a great state, where ruler and ruled meet physically in direct personal contact with each other.

The ruling minority tax, according to their desire, the subject majority, burden them with the principal weight of taxation, turn the proceeds to their own pockets, and press upon the state, in one form of taxes or another, almost only the crumbs to "the wretched taxpaying plebs." From the sweat of labor they erect advanced academies for the children of the wealthy, from which the children of the poor are shut out. From their superfluities they build theatres, whose entrance price frightens the worker at the threshold, but to be sure this is no great disadvantage to him, since the modern theatre (exceptions confirm the rule) does service only to the most corrupt taste, for it has become degraded to a refined brothel by the ruling class. In short, the ruling minority proceed in the city after the self-same egotistic, pernicious principle as in the state. This must be remedied. The social democracy, therefore, as for the state so for the municipality, universal, equal, free and direct suffrage, complete privilege and equalization, as for the citizen of the state so for the inhabitant of the city, a free communism in either.

In order, however, to make the state and community what they should be—that is to say, an association of free and equal men, who in brotherly solidarity and fraternal co-operation, "work for all and all for each," the struggle for the highest possible spiritual and physical well-being of every individual—it is essential that the economic lassitude of the present society be altered, for on it rest the present state.

The Social democracy, therefore, is the necessary consequence of the social and economic abuse of the time.

What sort of picture does present society offer?

War and right of force rule between the people, between classes and between individual men. Through capitalist production there is war between bourgeoisie and worker; through competition bourgeoisie is in strife with bourgeoisie, the poor with the poor. Socialism would set: permanently a limit to this war of all against all. It insists on peace between men, peace between nations, peace between classes. No peace, however, is to be hoped for so long as the cause remains which gives rise to the conditions of war.

The cause is the present class rule, with its wage slavery, business frauds, its deceit in all lines of traffic, its adulteration of all physical and spiritual necessities of life, its strikes and lockouts, the murder of the laborers in a mass hunger, infected dwellings and workrooms.

On the basis of the wage system the tower of power is constructed, and the social and political institutions for the subjugation and oppression of the laboring people—the Castle of Uri of the proletariat, the gloomy bastile of the class state, which has taken prisoner the bulk of the people, killed thought, broken and destroyed character and directed its cannon threateningly upon every one who did not bow himself in the dust before the ruling injustice.—Wilhelm Liebknecht.

"Bradstreet's" reports 199 business failures in the United States for the week ending July 12th. Of these, 88 per cent were of concerns having less than $5,000 capital, and nine per cent were of firms having capital between $5,000 and $20,000. The figures show how prosperity is distributed between the large capitalists and the little fellows.
CHAPTER III.

THE TRANSFORMATION OF MONEY INTO CAPITAL.

What is capital? Under the simple circulation of commodities the very nature of commodities in order to buy others. In the course of time there arises, out of this simple form of circulation, a new form. Let us compare both forms. The circulation—commodity-money—commodity has for its object consumption! I sell a commodity—one which, for me, is a non-use-value—to be able to buy commodities which for me are use-values. This form, C-M-C, ends within itself. The money I receive by the sale of my C is transformed into another C, which is connected with me and consequently ceases to circulate. The money itself is, as far as I am concerned, gone once for all. It seeks and finds ever new owners. The C with which the circulation began is under, for the simple form of circulation of commodity, normal circumstances (and we can only deal with normal circumstances) equal in value to the one with which the circulation ended.

Different from that is the form, M-C-M. This form has for its end not consumption, but something else entirely. The end of this form of circulation is not C but M. The money which is thrown into circulation at the start is not spent, but accumulated. It remains in its original owner. The circulation itself does not end within itself, i.e., the realization of money. The money, which was originally advanced, returns, to be again thrown into circulation, to return again, and so on, ad infinitum.

The cause of the form of circulation—C-M-C—is clear and plain. On the other hand, the form, M-C-M, seems, at first sight, foolish. For instance, if I sell a Bible in order of the buy with it, with money realized out of the sale of it, I have in the end a different commodity from what I had at the start, even though the value of the two may be the same. But if I buy $100 worth of potatoes and sell them for $200, I am no further at the end than I was at the start. There would be no cause for such a transaction, and certainly no advantage. But there would be both cause and advantage in it if, at the end, the sum of money was a different sum than at the start. A sum of money differs from another sum of money only in its size. Consequently, the circulation M-C-M has a cause or an advantage only when, at the end of the circulation, the sum of money has increased, i.e., is bigger than at the start. And in reality it is this increase in the sum of money that furnishes the motive of this form of circulation. He who buys in order to sell, buys to sell dearer than he buys. The circulation—M-C-M—is normal only then when at the end the sum of money is larger than at the start. The circulation of the other form, C-M-C, however, is, as we have seen, normal only when at the end the circulation the values are equal. Every purchase is a sale, and vice versa. This is why the cause of the circulation—M-C-M—seems to have for its end the same object as the other form, C-M-C. But already we have seen that they are essentially different. If I buy $100 worth of potatoes with the intention of selling them again, I do so only in the hope of being able to sell them dearer—perhaps for $110, i.e., $100 plus $10; i.e., to sell them for the original sum and a surplus. Let us call the commodity, C, the original sum of money, M, the surplus which I desire to express the complete form as follows: M-C-(M plus M). The surplus, which appears at the end, in addition to the originally advanced value, Marx calls surplus value. It can no more be confounded with its different forms—profit, interest, etc.—than value with price. We are in our presentation as yet dealing with the causes, not with the different forms of economic phenomena. Surplus-value is the positive peculiarity of the circulation—M-C-(M plus M). Gilts that move in the form of circulation develop, through surplus value, a new character; they become capital. Only in this relation can capital be understood. Capital, then, is value which breeds surplus value. Whoever invests his value into consideration will always find himself entangled in contradictions. For that reason appears all the confusion that now exists relative to what is and what is not capital. Some professor defines it simply as the capital of the Stone-age—yes, even the ape that uses a stone to crack nuts becomes a capitalist under this definition, as does the tramp who uses his stick to knock fruit from the trees as he tramps along the assiduous labor, which confers upon rats, snails, oaks or ants the doubtful honor of being fellow-capitalists of Rothschild, Krupp, Pullman, etc. Other economists counted as capital every thing that intensified labor: the state, human intelligence, even the human soul. It is self-apparent that such general definitions can only lead to commonplaces, which are edifying enough in kindergartens, but do not aid us in understanding the different forms of human society, their intrinsic development. It was reserved for Marx to clear political economics of common-places. Particularity is this true for the realm of the presentation of the peculiarities of capital. We have seen that capital is value, and surplus-value is surplus general form: M-C-(M plus M). Out of this it is already apparent (and realities confirm it) that it is the money-form in which every new capital starts its activity; but one sees furthermore that this activity necessitates the transformation of capital out of the money-form into the different forms of the world of commodities, and again the re-formation out of the commodity form into money.

We also see out of this form that neither money or commodities are always capital, but become capital only by performing a certain function. Money which I spent by buying an object for my consumption, bread or clothes, is no more capital than is the commodity produced by me and have in this factory. Means of production, stored-up labor, etc., form, as a matter of course, the material of capital, but only under certain circumstances.

Secondly, we must add that the general form of capital is M-(C plus M); but as yet we do not know how this surplus-value arises. Our form seems to indicate that surplus-value arises out of the act of buying and selling; that surplus-value arises out of the circulation of commodities. This is the common view and is caused, generally, by confounding exchange value with use-value. This holds good especially of the assertion that by an exchange both parties are gainers, for each seems to give what he can least afford to give. This explanation of the origin of surplus value is only met with where a conception of the word value is in a nebulous condition. To be satisfied with that explanation one must forget, on the one hand, that the exchange of commodities rests as well upon the inequality of their use-values as upon the equality of their commodity or exchange value; on the other hand, one must be simple and good-natured enough to believe that capitalist economists write and relate, and must believe, for instance, that the business transaction of the modern capitalist and the simple exchanges as carried on by savages are on a par with each other. We know better. We know that surplus value did not arise in the period during which barter prevailed, but makes its appearance after we have entered the period of producing and circulating commodities. The circulation of which is brought about with the aid of money. It is one of the many tricks of borgeois political economists to compare our modern industries with the transaction of people who lived thousands of years ago. We are dealing, not with barter, but with circulation of commodities.

Under no circumstances can surplus-value arise out of the circulation of commodities. Let us see! Supposing the laws underlying the circulation of commodities could be interfered with; supposing the privilege to sell commodities after ten per cent increase in price (i.e., an increase over the original value) were conferred upon the owners of commodities! The tailor who formerly sold his coat for $30 would now sell it for $33; the tailor would discover that the cloth, which formerly sold for $30 now cost him $33. He would have gained nothing. The result would be the same if the name of "money" had been changed. We can go a step further and say that the value on the postulate, that not all, but only a few owners of commodities know how to buy commodities below their value and sell them above it. For instance: A merchant buys from a farmer five tons of potatoes, the value of which is, let us say, $100, for $90, and sells them to a customer for $110. It is true that at the end of this transaction there is more value in the pocket of the merchant than at the beginning. But the sum total of values has not increased nor decreased. We had at the start values to the amount of $100 from the farmer, $90 from the merchant and $110 from the customer; total, $300. At the end we have $300, for we have exchanged $100 for the potato and $110 for the customer; total, $300. This shows that the increased value in the hands of the merchant did not arise out of an increase in the sum total of values, but out of the decrease in the hands of others. If the increase in surplus-value, we would be justified in saying that the thief who takes values out of our pockets creates surplus-value. Further investigation will bring out the fact still clearer that surplus-value does not arise out of the circulation of commodities, that neither buying or selling creates surplus value. Yet, surplus-value can not arise outside of the realm of circulation. An owner of commodities may, by his labor, transform a commodity, and in that case, give it a new value, but the original commodity is not increased thereby. If a shoemaker uses up $100 worth of leather, there appears in the finished product, the shoe, the value, first, of the leather and the value of the labors of the shoemaker, the value of the leather itself is not increased. And thus we are confronted by this peculiar problem: Surplus value does not arise through the circulation of commodities, but nevertheless does arise, and cannot, arise outside of the realm of circulation.

3. Labor power as a commodity. Let us again examine our formula M. — C. — (M. plus M.). It consists of two activities: M. — C. — purchase of a commodity; C. — expenditure of the commodity, by the worker; M. — sale of the commodity. According to the laws of circulation the value of M. must be equal to C., however, must be equal to M. plus M. This, however, is possible only if C. increases itself; only if C. is a commodity that has the quality of being the source of value; a commodity producing greater value during its consumption than it originally possessed. The puzzle — "surplus-value" — is solved as soon as we discover a commodity whose owner purchases it in order to produce a surplus-value. That is a commodity with the quality of being the source of value; a commodity, the consumption of which results in the creation of value, so that our formula in relation to it would be as follows: M. — C. — (C. plus C.) — (M. plus M.). We know that commodity-values are the price of the creation solely of labor. Consequently the above formula can be realized only if labor-power itself is a commodity.

"The labor-power," says Marx, "we understand as the power of acting as productive capitals, existing in the personality of a human being, which he sets in motion as often as he produces use-values of any kind."

Labor-power must appear in the market as a commodity. What does that imply? We have seen above that the exchange of commodities presupposes owners of commodities who are at liberty to dispose of their commodities as they please. Therefore, the owner of labor-power, or the laborer, must himself, if his labor-power shall be a commodity. His labor-power must always be commodity; he must not sell it permanently, or once for all, but only for given periods of time, if he sold it entirely to one master, he would no longer have the quality of being an owner of commodity, he would be a commodity himself. Another requirement must be complied with if labor-power is to be transformed into a commodity. We have seen that a use-value, before it can become a commodity, must be a non-use-value for its owner. As all other commodities, labor-power must be a non-use-value for the laborer before it becomes a commodity in the Market. The use-value, labor-power possesses, is the production of use-values. The production of use-values, however, is dependent upon the ownership of the means of production. The worker who owns his own means of production does not sell his labor-power; he uses it himself and sells the result of his labor — his product. The conversion of labor-power into a commodity means, then, above all, the divorce of the worker from the means of production, i.e., the land and instrument of labor. The conversion of the production of money into capital is the "free" worker, free especially from all necessary means of production. These "free" workers have not always existed. They are the product of a long historical development, and it is at a comparatively late period that this form of labor became the dominating form, the form that determines the character of society. The biography of capital begins with the sixteenth century.

At last we know the commodity that creates surplus-value. Let us see what the value of this commodity is. The value of labor-power, like the value of every other commodity, is determined by the social necessary labor-time. The labor-power of the worker increases, and this is the necessary labor-time expended in the production of labor-power. Labor-power presupposes the existence of the laborer. This existence needs for its perpetuation a certain amount of necessaries of life. The necessary labor-time for the production of labor-power is the time during which the worker expends the longer and harder he works, the more of these necessaries he needs in order to be able to recuperate and work as industriously the succeeding day.

Again, the needs of the worker in different countries vary, owing to different climatic conditions, etc. A Norwegian laborer, for instance, needs more things for a living than one in India. In a country where the worker grows and writes, his necessaries are fewer, and consequently their labor-power sells for less than in countries where the laborer is further advanced. As we all know, the worker is perishable; he dies. Capital, however, wants to be imperishable. To say that labor-power is perishable is to come! The worker expends the longer and harder he works, the more of these necessaries he needs in order to be able to recuperate and work as industriously the succeeding day.

According to vulgar capitalist political economist, it is the capitalist who advances the wages to the worker, because he pays the worker (in most cases) before he has sold the products of labor. In reality it is quite the reverse. It is the worker who credits the capitalist with his labor-power. Let us, for instance, suppose I buy a rye in order to make whisky. I pay for the rye and some time after I have paid for it, I have sold it. Would it not be ridiculous for me to insist that I had advanced the price of the rye to the farmer because I had paid him before I had sold the whisky? To say "I buy for "cash" means to say that I pay for it and balance as if I had paid it. Every-the-day merchant would smile at a bit of economic wisdom that would claim that he who pays for his goods after he has consumed them not only "pays cash," but actually advances the money to the seller. In the market the merchant takes that roat that capitalist economists have the nerve to dish out to the worker. If the capitalist bought the commodity labor power for cash "he would have to pay for it immediately" after it comes into his possession; i.e., at the beginning of the week, not at the end. The pres-cent system of paying the laborers adds to the load they have to carry; they are not only compelled oittimes to risk their wages with months intervening, and the monthly pay-day actually forces many of them to seek credit, which is given only at the expense of accepting adulterated goods at a high price. However the system of paying wages may be, the relation of worker and capitalist under capitalism stops short at the existing between owners of commodities who exchange equal values. Capital does not antagonize the laws of the circulation of commodities, but exists in harmony with these laws.

When we speak of labor-power as a commodity, as free and equal and mutually independent individuals; they belong to the same class; they are brothers! Worker and capitalist exchange equal values with each other. Apparently, the kingdom has come! Apparently, the age of equality, of justice, freedom, and brotherly love appeared with the reign of the wage-system. The curse of serfdom and tyranny and exploitation has passed like a dream! Thus say the learned apologists for interests of the capitalist class!

A Question and an Answer

San Francisco, Aug. 28, 1901.

Joseph J. Noel, Editor of "Advocate":

Dear Sir — Kindly inform me how it is that the Socialist Party of S. F., formerly S. D. P., appears in the capitalist papers as the Socialist Labor Party, when, if I be correctly informed, such is not the case?

Subscriber.

The first, and possibly the chief reason why we are called the Socialist Labor Party, may come from the fact that we have nominated none for office. The party of the laboring man has come! Apparently, the kingdom has come! The age of equality, of justice, freedom, and brotherly love appeared with the reign of the wage-system. The curse of servitude and tyranny and exploitation has passed like a dream! Thus say the learned apologists for interests of the capitalist class!

The question has already been referred to a number of times, but for the information of our readers we will endeavor to answer it. The Socialist Labor Party was formed in 1875, by a number of persons who were opposed to the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, and who insisted that the capitalists were content, and were ready to give it freely for the possible injury of the S. L. P. which might do to the Socialist movement, by showing that there is still a division in the proletarian ranks. We are opposed to the capitalists are content. It is only when we are reounced to each other's idiosyncrasies and are determined that no personal dislike will keep us from helping forward the cause of the downtrodden and the oppressed, that the capitalists fear us.

The capitalists have organized to destroy organizations of the workers and they have the executive, the legislative and the judicial powers of the government to aid them. In the political arena we are divided and on the economic they are united. If we would elect class conscious workers to the positions of power in the government, we would have no difficulty in placing at Homestead, Hazleton, Pana, and other bloody fields would not again disgrace our civilization. It is time for the creator of wealth to seize the powers of government and administer its functions in the interests of the workers.

Seattle Socialist.—Brother Noel feels rebuked. The corrections you suggest will be attended to.

The Social Democratic Herald has been adopted as the official organ by the Federated Trades Council of Milwaukee.

Mr. Bryan has bought his own official organ in Washington, D. C., "The National Worker," for five dollars. We think he was bunkoed.

The workingman Mayor of McCleesport, the storm-center of the steel strike, has solved the problem of riots. He appointed only trades union men as special policemen. In San Francisco the Democratic Mayor, Phelan, appoints scabs and criminals, with the result that the down-town districts are in a state of siege.

There is an effort on foot to make this organization of scabs a national one. If it is successful a decided change must come over the spirit of the trades unions. Only political action along the lines of Socialism can cope with such an organization. With the government controlled by the working class there will be no need of scabs, organized or unorganized.

The "Overland Monthly" devotes a full page to the praise of Henry T. Scott for his "genius of religious entertainment" of our "ruler," Mr. McKinley, while the latter was in San Francisco. This is quite unnecessary. The entertainment committee paid the superintendent of the Universal Workshops for everything. There is no necessity for thanking this hotel-keeper; one should rather ask if he had a hotel-keeper's license.

After all the steel strike and the machinists' strike and the strike of the various trades in this city may wake up the workingmen to the absurdity of voting for the same candidates as the magnates of the steel trust, the machine shop owners and the members of the Merchantile Union. All of which denies the existence of a class struggle is a scoordiul or a knife, and whoever says that this struggle does not extend into the political field is an enemy to the progress of the working class.

The United Labor League of Philadelphia has gone on record for Socialism. The franchise-grabbers drove the Democrats and the Republicans alike into a corner. When Comrade Fred Long brought in his report of the committee appointed at the time of the last franchise fight to investigate the whole protest came from any part of the audience, though the report was along the lines of militant class-conscious Socialism. A few more every day, and then enough to complete the work of overthrowing capitalism forever.

The editorials from the "Portland Oregonian" we have been "lifting" for the benefit of ADVANCE readers, to show what intelligence and precision a capitalist editor can go to the root of the industrial problem, have come to an anti-climax. The editor's solution of the problem is free trade. We have dropped him from our exchange list. A man with no more brains than to offer this pet idocy of a lot of notoriety to the classless social ill is not worth the postage to carry ADVANCE to him weekly.

From Montana come the news that the State Trades and Labor Council has created a standing committee whose duty it will be to educate the members of the various affiliated unions upon working class politics. The fine Italian hand of the Socialist is evidenced in this. With a standing committee pouring Socialist literature into the various unions bearing the seal of official approval, Mr. Clark, the millionaire, and all the rest of that gang of parasites who fatten on the political ignorance of the working class, will be relegated to "inaudible desuetude." There will be something doing up Montana way in a very few years if this Socialist agitation keeps up in the unions.

"All this is a large question and a very immediate one in Europe, but it is not without its direct bearing in the great Republic of America also. There you have a national constitution of surpassing justice and nobility, perhaps the freest, most liberal, most enlightened constitution that has ever yet governed a nation of men. But you have the defects of your qualities even in America, where arrogated rights show themselves in the realms of capital and of individual ownership of land almost as absolutely as on the thrones of the Old World. The Samson of popular power has to fight the arrogance. And that comes in the name of monopolies as well as those that come in the name of monarchies.—Hall Caine.

An organization of strike breakers is in process of formation in the East. Freedom of contract is right, no detention, no dictatorship is their platform. Slavery, starvation, and obedience, is a fair translation of it. These hirings of the capitalists go from one strike to another and help to debase the workingmen with whom they come in contact. They cannot get as high as ten dollars a day during a strike and are not above the most contemptible tricks to gain their ends. The fact that they are unskilled and destroy much property while trying to operate a plant matters nothing to the capitalists. The object is to secure as many men in a given mill as possible. Numbers count for considerable when it comes to disheartening the strikers.

One more proof of the superiority of our wealthy class. Paris has to descend to an unseemly depth in vice to please the yearly visitors that flock from America to the French capital. Jules Cambon, the French Ambassador to the United States, protested against what seemed to him the "bad tendencies." Senator Beranger, head of the license department, admitted Cambon's information, but in extenuation said, "These Americans are not prone to being amused, and declaring their intention so loudly that the city asks on a particular hue for their benefit." The "particular hue" in question is a bright saffron, and is affected for the benefit of not only the males, but the females of our species. We are fast proving our Anglo-Saxon qualities by being long-faced, canting hypocrites at home, and loud-mouthed offenders of decency abroad.

Benjamin Ide Wheeler, President of the State University, in answer to the communication sent by the San Francisco Labor Council protesting against scabs from his university working against the unions, annexed that the University is for the free development of liberty and that the students have the right to work for whom they please, and that the young men employed are working their way through school. All this would be excellent matter if it were the truth. The University is for the preservation of liberty by the University. This can be questioned when we see that capitalism hinders liberty, and to the extent that the State University aids capitalism to that extent does it give consent to the repressiveness of scabs on workingmen's wrists. And the statement that the men who unloaded the schooner "Irwin" are working their way through school is an untruth and the President knows it is an untruth. The names of the men were published, also the fraternities each belonged to. Dr. Wheeler knows, and so does every one at all acquainted with life at any of our American colleges, that the first thing necessary for the preservation of liberty is money. The university scabs are from the capitalist class. They have money. They worked merely to break the strike and President Wheeler knows it.

The necessity for additional protection for the lives and property of our citizens may not be apparent to some people, but to us it is very much apparent. Have we not 350 lawless rascals calling themselves a Merchants' Association who knows what they may not do besides import into this city blacklegs and criminals, and invest them with a star and a club, with instructions to use the latter unpardonably? Unless the working class wakes up to the necessity for protecting its members, the 350 merchants, ship-chandlers, and grocers will abuse them to the point of individual retaliation. Then the militia may be called out. Let the unions force every case in court against these imported criminals who have brought the criminal law to the point of destruction of the peace. Let them also push all cases against members of the regular force who have shown a desire to throw us back into the stone age of human development. And where a striker is whipped, picketing him let him not be left alone to suffer, without a friend to bid him cheer. These are things which may be done now, at once. And by persistent effort so much good
The Legal Committee.

In the decision handed down by five learned judges, whereby the power of a community to govern itself was denied, the following phrase appears. "The question is raised if a county or city can initiate laws by petition. No legislature can give power to these communities to govern themselves." Here is a plain case. Theoretically, this is a government of the people, by the people, for the people. Actually, it is a government by a few lawyers, who have obtained the dignity of judges. Even when the people, after much sacrifice of time and money, impress their representatives with the necessity of passing certain measures for the benefit of the people, the legislature, accused of being sentimented and crowded with circumscription, undo all the labor of years. Every attempt at freedom for the people is met by the same mass of arguments why the people should not be free. One would imagine we had jumped twenty years into the future, and had that emperor promised us by a certain Mr. Hadley.

The basis of our law is found in English jurisprudence, and English jurisprudence has developed and is the rule of the, between the sovereign and the common people. In this country the people rule themselves, and yet because the phraseology of our courts presupposes an existing antagoism between the legislating power and the people who rule themselves are placed in the position of lying their own hands. In other words, the American people are hampered at every turn by the antagonism between a mythical sovereign and the people who control the government. "No legislature can give the power to these communities to govern themselves," says the court. Who would this power, if it were granted, injure? Surely, not the people of the whole State; still less, indirectly, has the people by having this power. Who, then? The question resolves itself into this: Given a sovereign court, a collection of men heavy of phrase and dull of wit, give them the power to declare every law made for the benefit of the people unconstitutional, and what will be the outcome? Surely, the people will some day arouse themselves and say: We are sovereign in fact as well as in word in our land. I-ported to get any community way of our progress. Hair-splitting and fictitious sovereign outside of itself, yet resting in us, that must be persuaded we are fit to govern ourselves before we can govern ourselves, will not be allowed to impede our development. These courts and these judges misuse our patience. Away with them! When this is done, and it will be done, we can then have a government of the people, by the people.

The Opening of Our Municipal Campaign.

Our manifesto and declaration of principles are open to the consideration of all citizens of this city. The class war now going on in San Francisco is clearly explained, and the reason for it and the only remedy. The common ownership of all the utilities in the city is demanded and if our candidates are elected they will at once set to work to enact such laws as will make the street railways, the gas and electric light plants, and all other general utilities, the property of the people. They are rightfully the property of the people, and have been built and paid for them, though they are held for ransom by the capitalist class. This must change. Workingmen who built these plants, and who added to the wealth of the city are either dead and buried in Potter's Field, or living, they are tramping the highways or subsisting on charity. Meantime, the capitalists who did none of the actual work of building the plants, are living in luxury, making every effort to keep their positions, with the aid of the law, light, etc., that are produced by their brothers of the working class. This must stop. We have men and we have principles that will stop it. Our candidates are union men; they are workingmen. We ask you to look at our ticket. We ask you to study our platform. If there is anything wrong we will not only be glad to change it, but we will furnish a hall FREE to any one that will be kind enough to come and tell us what we can do to make the people offer. It is more than worth be granted by any other political party. We court criticism. We wish to be as near perfection as it is possible for a political party to be. We know we have the principles that will create a social justice out of the working class from its present bondage. Furthermore, we do not elect a man and tell him to govern us. We elect a man who will carry out the wishes of the people. The people govern the man elected on our ticket and to that end we hold the signed resignation of every one of our nominees. This gives us absolute control of our representatives. When they do anything contrary to the principles of socialism, when they are going contrary to the interests of the working class, they are hauled down and retired to oblivion.

There is absolutely nothing offensive to the best interests of our city in the platform of the Socialist party. It is constructive from beginning to end.

Meetings will be held every Thursday and Sunday night at the Academy of Sciences Hall, Market street, where questions may be opened for discussion and decided. These meetings will be held every Sunday and Tuesday evenings at the corner of Grant avenue and Market street, for the purpose of explaining the platform of the Socialist party and other questions pertaining to socialism. This is a campaign of serious import to the Socialist movement or the whole Coast. Every friend of socialism should work.

Bishop Potter's View of the Future.

That thing which, as I turn my face toward the future, seems to be climbing up above the horizon of the world, is a republic, in which all, in which all liberty of action or achievement, whether in letters or art, or in the industrial world, is taken away from us, and the whole force of human society reduced to a mere creature or a mere tool of the state. In which men and women everywhere shall dress alike, in paper costumes, which will need no washing and can be burned up every evening; but rather that diviner republic in which he of noblest gifts will have learnt that his noblest and sweetest use of him is not for his own gain or his own aggrandizement, but for every weaker, lowlier, less endowed brother or sister, who may need to have a narrow and sordid existence surrounded with the hand of brotherly help and illuminated by the light of brotherly love.

—Bishop Potter.

The reverend gentleman need have no fear that a republic of mediocrity, where no man with genius can exercise himself, will be as smothered in the world as he is in the world. The opportunity to develop his soul, the differences in individuals will be accentuated. The things that are chief in making the "flower and the fruit of life" not only possible but necessary in these our own day are the thing with then. A noble breed of men, and a kinder, truer lot of brothers, and a sweeter, wholesome lot of companions will fill the world than ever before. And it will not come one-half so much from argument and exhortation as from a wiping away of the necessity to be cruel and mean. Life today harder one's heart or breaks it. Life in the "diviner republic" will bring the opposite of such conditions into being, and with conditions changed man will change. And we are fast moving towards that diviner republic, though not along the route advised by Bishop Codman Henry Potter. And we can almost risk our reputation as a people in saying that the reverend bishop need have no fear of being compelled to wear paper clothing. He has been used to the finest broadcloth and we know that use breeds habit in a man. For that reason we shall figure for the longer of broadcloth as ministerial garb, though we offend some of our brothers in the "diviner republic." And therein the reverend bishop has proved that there will be at least one subject upon which there will be two opinions when the millennium is ushered in.

Street-car Men Are Threatened.

DISMISSAL THE PENALTY FOR HELPING ORGANIZED LABOR.

The street railway companies have threatened to discharge any employe who aids the locked-out union men. A conductor on the Sutter street line who undertook to sell tickets to a benefit for the strikers was severely reprimanded and threatened with summary dismissal if he sold a ticket. The Market Street Railway Company also has coerced its employees until they dare not contribute a penny to a union benefit.

"If you sell or attempt to sell one of those tickets for the labor benefit your services will not be required any longer by his company."

That was the message in substance that the Sutter Street Railway Company sent one of its conductors, whose sympathies led him to accept for sale a package of tickets for a labor benefit.

"I would like to sell those tickets for you," one of the conductors said, "but I cannot. They would discharge me if they heard I had them in my possession."

On the Market Street lines the men were equally afraid.

"I went out to a barber-shop near one of the power-houses of the Market Street lines," said Mr. MacArthur yesterday, "and offered the barber a package of tickets, asking him to keep them in his place and sell them to any customer who applied."

"Take those out of my shop," he cried. "If the railway company found that I had allowed tickets to a labor benefit inside my doors they would drive me out of business by threatening to discharge any man seen patronizing my shop."

"A conductor on the Sutter Street line was very willing to dispose of some tickets for us. One afternoon I met him on his car and gave him a bundle of 200 tickets. The next day he was not required at the carhouse. He was about to leave his home to go out and sell some of the tickets among the men when a message for him came from the superintendents. He returned to the carhouse.

"Is it true," they asked him, 'that you were given 25 tickets for the labor benefit?'

"No," he said, 'I have taken 200 tickets.'

"If you sell or attempt to sell one of those tickets you will not be required any longer. There is nothing further to be discussed," said the railway official.

"The conductor had no choice in the matter. He had to return all the tickets to me. He was afraid to take even one for himself. That is the way in which the street-railway corporations coerce their employees and deny them the privilege of using their wages as they please."

This is our freedom; this is our boasted liberty and equality. Who is that man would stand such conditions? Who is that a man with brains would not seek for a solution of such a problem as is here presented? Can the knowledge possessed by the Socialists and Socialists that there is a class struggle going on in society be longer disputed by members of the working class? Here are the owners of the street railways helping the Merchants' Association and doing all in its power to keep their employees from helping other members of the working class. If the city owned the street railways, no such action would be tolerated for a minute. If the working class knew enough to strike one good blow at the ballot-box and elect men into office upon the platform of common ownership of the street railways and other utilities, freedom that is denied men now would be taken as a matter of course. There would be no five or six thousand men obeying the whim of one or two."

A Dream.

BY RALPH IRONS (Olive Schriener).

I thought I stood on the border of a great desert, and the sand blew about everywhere. And I thought I saw two great figures like beasts of burden of the desert and one lay upon the sand with its neck stretched out, and one stood by it. And I looked curiously at the one that lay upon the ground, for it had a great burden on its back, and the sand was thick about it, so that it seemed to have piled over it for centuries.

And I looked very curiously at it. And there stood one beside me watching. And I said to him, "What is this huge creature that lies here on the sand?" And he said, "This is a woman; she is the best man in her body." And I said, "Why does she lie here motionless with the sand piled about her?"

And he answered, "Listen and I will tell you! Ages and ages long she has lain here, and the wind has blown over her. The oldest, oldest man living has never seen her move: the oldest, oldest book records that she lay here then, as she lies here now, with the sands about her. But listen! Older than the oldest book, older than the oldest recorded memory of man, on the Rocks of Language, on the hard-baked clay of ancient customs, now crumbling to decay, are found the marks of her footsteps! Side by side with him who stands beside her you may trace them: and you know that she who now lies there once wandered free over the rocks with him.

And I said, "Why does she lie there now?"

And he said, "I take it, ages ago the Age-of-domination-of-muscular force found her, and when she stooped low to give succor to her young, and her back was broad, he put his burden of subjection on to it, and tied it on with the broad band of Inevitable Necessity. Then she looked at the earth and the sky, and knew there was no hope for her and she lay down on the sand with the burden she could not loosen. Ever since she has lain there. And the ages have come, and the ages have gone, but the band of Inevitable Necessity has not been cut."

And I looked and I saw in her eyes the terrible patience of the century, and the ground was wet with her tears, and her nostrils blew up the sand.

And I said, "Has she ever tried to move?"

And he said, "Sometimes a limb has quivered. But she is wise; she knows she cannot rise with the burden on her."

And I said, "Why does not he who stands by her leave her and go on?"

And he said, "He cannot. Look—"

And I saw a broad band passing. I heard a sound of something cracking, and I looked, and I saw the band that bound the burden on her back broken asunder; and the burden rolled to the ground.

And I said, "What is this?"

And he said, "The Age-of-muscular-force is dead. The Age-of-nervous-force has killed him with the knife he holds in his hand; and silently and invisibly he has crept up to the woman, and with that knife of Mechanical Invention he has cut the band that bound the burden to her back. The Inevitable Necessity is broken. She might rise now."

And I saw that she lay motionless on the sand, and with her eyes open and her neck stretched out. And she seemed to look for something on the far-off border of the desert that never came. And I wondered if she were awake or asleep. And as I looked her body quivered, and a light came into her eyes, like when a sunbeam breaks into a dark room.

I said, "What is it?"

He answered, "He does not understand. When she moves she draws the band that binds them, and hurts him, and he moves further from her. The day will come when he will understand, and will know what she is doing. Let her once stagger on to her knees. In that day he will stand close to her, and look into her eyes with sympathy.

And she stretched her neck, and the drops fell from her. And the creature rose an inch from the earth and sank back. And I cried, "Oh, she is too weak; she can not walk! The long years have taken all her strength from her. Can she never move?"

And he answered me, "See the light in her eyes!"

And slowly the creature staggered on to its knees.

San Francisco is still the strike center of the Coast. Men are brought from the East by the bosses almost daily and refuse to work when they learn the conditions that prevail here. There is no honor or honesty in taking a man from his home and throwing him penniless on a community under false pretenses. The owners of the Iron Works and the other would-be slave drivers may live to regret their action.
A Few Thoughts from the Symposium on the Reconciliation of Capital and Labor.

By Carroll Davidson Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor.

- It must be granted that industrial conditions constitute the basis of society, and that all social reforms must hinge upon industrial conditions, and, therefore, the economic trend of these conditions toward what we popularly know as socialism constitutes a vital question.

One of the great objectives of socialism is to eliminate competition. We are having now, in this decade, various combinations with the avowed purpose of eliminating competition. We are told of the competition among the members of a single group; that each group has its own internal competition; that by consolidating all the members of that group into a great combination internal competition ceases.

Then we should have the great groups competing with each other. Suppose, for instance, that under the modern industrial combination all the farmers should combine, and all the textile manufacturers, and so on down the list. In such descending combinations is competition among the industrial members of these groups, and then can these great combinations compete with each other?

One of these difficult questions of the trust discussions is found in that very matter. These discussions show that the trust in an industrial combination (which has come up since the trust), is an evidence of the power of combination to kill competition. These groups may become consolidated into greater groups and subconsciously one group, and then the Government takes the place of the combination. It is one of the tendencies of the times. It belongs to this trend.

Whether it will ever be accomplished it will come to a showdown between socialism and social democracy—a matter of industrial evolution—and we shall find ourselves in the environment, and probably not quarrel with it.

The trust means the equalization of capital. It so happens that there are 2,050 railroad corporations in this country. It is difficult to state just degree these combinations are reaching, but something like 800 roads or corporations run the 2,050; and it is perfectly safe to say that ten men in the United States, whose names are familiar, control the whole 2,050 roads, either directly or indirectly.

There are influential men out side of this group of ten powerful men—great railroad managers, able men, ornaments to the country—but nevertheless these ten men control the railroad business of the United States, and nearly all of them live in the city of New York.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has said:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that vast schemes of railway control are in process of construction. Of them, the one with the rival lines is to be restrained by these combinations. If the plans already foreshadowed are brought into effective results there will be a vast centralization of railroad properties, with all the power involved in such far-reaching combinations, yet uncontrolled by any public authority."

This is a statement which will gradually and more rapidly as time goes on, sink into the consciousness of this country; and when it is seen that instead of ten men it is five, then instead of five it is three, and instead of three it is one man that controls all the railroad interests of the country, it will be found that public committees will not be afraid of the trend toward socialism.

The chief element which is inducing the wage receiver to become a state socialist is machinery.

Trades unions themselves are not socialist organizations. Yet among their membership may be some degree members of the Socialist party. There have been some very sharp contests in the general meetings of the representatives of trades unions of this country by the Socialist and anti-Socialist elements.

One of these takes place in the automobile industry as for their recognition that through it wages have been increased, his productive power greatly enhanced, his comforts broadened and his work-day greatly reduced. It is the result of coal, steel, and iron, that so far the benefits arising from the application of power machinery have not been equally divided.—San Francisco Examiner, Sept. 4th.

A Few Objections Over-Ruled.

When you describe the Socialists as a class "unsuccessful, dishonest, and vicious miscreants," you should, if you are at all informed, that many of not only the leaders but of the rank and file of the Socialist movement are men and women of pre-eminent ability, people who on their missions as they are and live. But they are generous souls who are capable of looking to the future and who are willing to sacrifice present advantage for their class first and for humanity finally.

Gentlemen, you seem to laud contentment as a virtue in itself. A well-fed hog is the most perfect type of perfect contentment. Should one's contentment "reach no farther than the satisfaction of his individual wants? Are we brothers or are we not?"

You seem greatly exercised because, as you say, the Socialists expect to at once bring in the millennium or kingdom of God on earth. Now of course you put this, as suits your purpose, in a false light. But suppose we put it in its right light: that man has taught to "at once" bring in the millennium—that day which has been the objective point of the yearning eyes and that has been the subject of the best people of all countries and ages.

Now, dear friends, please be frank. Do you want the millennium or do you not? Do you wish it indefinitely postponed—laid on the table. Do you want to "at once" bring in the millennium—that day which has been the objective point of the yearning eyes and that has been the subject of the best people of all countries and ages?

But I hear you say, "We want the millennium brought in but you Socialists can't do the trick. You haven't got the right card up your sleeve."

And to this I answer, all right, then; you fellows bring it in. Nobody is standing in your way. Why don't you do it? You've had a long chance at the wheel. And instead of guiding the old tub toward the harbor you are steering it straight toward the rocks. You have proved yourselves poor pilots and we demand, in the name of the crew and passengers, to rid the world of this unsafe craft, and humanity, that you either change your course or give us a turn at the wheel.

But, as I said, you try to put us in a false light in this matter. Socialism will give the order—"about face"—believe the ideal will then be within measurable distance. We are now standing like the Orientals, with our faces toward the past and our eyes upon the ground. Socialists expect the dreams of the past to come true. You Socialists are not to compete with the machine; we will do it cooperatively instead of individually.

Science and the machine will work with and for men, not against men as now. Does the workingman nor have to compete with the machines? Because now? No! Then why the unemployed problem, which, like the poor, is always with us? Socialism will refuse to permit one man to exploit another by means of the private ownership of the machine which neither he nor any other man created. No man has a moral right to privately own that which he did not individually create or its equivalent in value.

Now, at this point you run yourselves into a queer contradiction. You first ridicule the Socialists for wishing, as you say, to bring about the kingdom of God on earth. Then you quote Christ's words, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God on earth." Then you quote ChristianCreeds, "fulfil the law of God," etc., and blame the Socialists for not doing this but, "Seeking first the economic basis." Evidently, gentleman, the poet's description of woman, "uncertain, coy and hard to please," would suit you. You damn us if we do and you damn us if we don't.

The simple fact is, the Socialists propose, by laying firm and sure "the economic basis" to provide the only means for bringing in the kingdom of God on earth. The Socialists are laying the way and building the road for the "Kingdom of God" to travel over.

Competition is war—industrial war—is it not? And we have W. T. Sherman's word for it that there is no such thing which is equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Consequently competition is hell. But hell is not a favorable place in which to prepare men for heaven is it? The Socialists propose the same commercial competition, which is hell. Then, we say, the only thing that is rise to (individualistic theology to the contrary notwithstanding) humanity will redeem itself. Do you doubt it friends?

W. A. COREY, Chieftain. San Diego.

Quite a novel and, at the same time effective, method of securing justice was adopted by two thousand textile workers of Wesson, Miss., which town boasts of having the largest cotton mill in the South. A manager by the name of Oliver started out to make a record by discharging the old employees—they were laid off on the 1st of the month so much old iron. A sort of revolutionary spirit inspired the other employees, and one fine evening recently about 300 of them formed a procession, marched to Manager Oliver's residence, and politely informed that gentleman that if he did not vamois instantly his carcass would decorate a telegraph pole. The modern cannibal did not stop to argue. He ordered a carriage, gave orders to pack his belongings and decamped. When the mill proprietors heard the news they reinstated the old fellow. The marchers were lawbreakers—breakers of capitalistic laws. Who will condemn?—Cleveland Citizen.

"Papa, what is a syndicate?"

"My son, it is a body of human beings entirely surrounded with money."—"Life."
Evolution and Socialism.

The theory of universal evolution which—apart from such or such a more or less disputable detail—is truly characteristic of the vital tendency of modern scientific thought, has also been made to appear in absolute contradiction with the theories and the practical ideals of Socialism.

In this case the fallacy is obvious. If Socialism is understood as that vague complex of sentimental aspirations so often crystallized into the artificial utopian creations of a new human world, to be substituted by some sort of magic in a single day for the old world in which we live, then it is quite true that the scientific theory of evolution condemns the presuppositions of the illusions of artificial or utopian political theories, which, whether they are reactionary or revolutionary, are always romantic, or in the words of the American Senator Ingalls, are "iridescent dreams."

But, unfortunately for our adversaries, contemporary Socialism is an entirely different thing from the Socialism which preceded the work of Marx. Apart from the same sentiment of protest against present injustices and the same aspirations toward a better future, there is a sharp difference between these two Socialisms, neither in their logical structure nor in their deductions, unless it be the clear vision, which in modern Socialism becomes a mathematically exact prediction (thanks to the theories of evolution) of the final social organization—based on the collective ownership of the land and the means of production.

These are the conclusions to which we are led by the evidence of the facts—facts verified by scientific examination of the three principal contradictions which our opponents have sought to set up between Socialism and scientific evolution.

From this point it is impossible not to see the direct causal connection between Marxian Socialism and scientific evolution, since it must be recognized that the former is simply the logical consequence of the application of the evolutionary theory to the domain of economics.—Enrico Ferri.

The Steel Strike.

In discussing the steel strike, remember this:

The steel trust owns a certain number of mills. Of these, a certain proportion, say one-half, are worked by non-union men.

The union men demand not that all the mills be made into union mills, but that non-union men be permitted to join unions without losing their places. The trust, which has compelled men to sign agreements not to join unions, refuses to rescind the agreement, and part of the unthinking public sympathizes, saying that the union men, as long as they are well paid and get what they ask for, have no right to force unionism on non-union mills.

But this is the situation. The trust hates the union—nobody doubts that.

The trust cannot run all its mills all of the time.

In the dull season some mills must be idle, some of the men must be thrown out of work.

Everybody knows that in the dull season the trust will throw out of work the union men when the union men ask for higher wages and employ non-union men who take what is given to them.

If the union men allowed this state of affairs to continue without a struggle, this would result:

In hard times union men would always be idle, non-union men would be busy.

A premium would be put on the existence of the non-union men, and union men would work at serious disadvantage.
