The Economic Cause of the Present Impending Social Revolution

Odd fellows' Hall was the scene of an unusual encounter when W. J. Scott Wilson delivered the title talk on "The Economic Cause of the Present Impending Social Revolution." The audience was captivated by Wilson's deep insights into the issue, and the event became a significant moment in the discussion surrounding the economic disparities and injustices of the time.

As on the previous Sunday, the mild winter winds blew in gusts, and Wilson addressed the topics of economic disparity and the rising discontent among the working classes. He emphasized the role of capitalism in creating a system where the few are enriched at the expense of the many. Wilson's speech was a call to action, urging the audience to confront the root causes of social unrest and to engage in the struggle for a fairer economic system.

Upon concluding his address, Wilson was met with applause from the audience, who were inspired by his words. The event concluded with a discussion among some of the attendees, who shared their thoughts and plans for addressing the economic causes of social unrest.
The Need of Organization.

The troubles of the National Labor party, and the organization of the Socialist party with some of its many local bodies, are indications that a new era is beginning. The problems of the past are being solved, and a new vision of the future is emerging. The organization of a general strike is no longer an abstract idea. It is being laid down in the minds of the men who have the courage to think and to act. The battle has been fought in the streets, and the victorious has been the spirit of the people. The future is looking bright, and the prospects are hopeful.

California’s Guiltotine by MARY FAIRBROTHER.

We all know the effects of the cruel, inhuman treatment of men as worked out in the sanitorium. The patient, unless he has a strong will, will soon be broken down. The doctor has no time to do the right thing. He is too busy with his own work. The patient is left to his own devices, and the result is often a tragic one.

The time has come when the sane should be segregated from the insane. The sane should be able to lead a normal life, and the insane should be given the care they need.

The struggle is on, and we must all join in order to secure justice for all.

ADVANCE

The Primary Election

Wherever official primaries are held, the candidates should adopt some plan similar to the following:

First, Select in party organization meetings the properly qualified electors to vote at the state conventions, one man for each delegate. The same as for delegates to county conventions, each is to be held, as many as the petition for such convention calls for.

Second, The candidates should be pledged to abide by any instructions of the party organization meetings of their respective clubs.

The need of this plan is obvious. In the past the candidates have been too much the servants of the political bosses, who have used the candidates to do their bidding. The candidates have been too much the servants of the political bosses, who have used the candidates to do their bidding. The candidates have been too much the servants of the political bosses, who have used the candidates to do their bidding. The election day is a war, and every soldier should be prepared. The candidates should be prepared to fight, and to fight well. The candidates should be prepared to win, and to win fair. The candidates should be prepared to be the servants of the people, and to serve the people.

A Song of Morgan

"Now, Mark, my boy," says Pony X, "better run the gauntlet now. The way you boss those marching muhs Doge really makes me laugh. The sight of you makes me feel young with--..."

They look in at the barn and scare the stalls into motion.

"Hop on, and we'll be out of here," says Horse X. And they are off.

The next day brings more of the same.

"Is that all by way of thanks for your help?"

"Yes, Mark, my boy," says Horse X. "Better run the gauntlet now. The way you boss those marching muhs Doge really makes me laugh. The sight of you makes me feel young with--..."
