The University of Pennsylvania in Power Supplies’ Pay

AUSTRIAN SOCIALISTS FAIL TO BREAK STRIKE

VIENNA, June 8—In spite of the efforts of the social democratic press to throttle the strike of the workers in the factories of the Alpine Mountain Electric Works, the socialists have failed to break the strike.

The workers of the Alpine Mountain Electric Works, who are employed in the manufacture of power supplies, have been on strike for several weeks. The company has been unable to secure an injunction against the strikers, and the workers have been able to maintain their strike by refusing to work.

The company has tried to break the strike by offering higher wages and better working conditions, but the workers have refused to accept them.

The strike continues and the workers are determined to fight until they get what they want. The company is unable to operate without the workers, and the situation is likely to continue for some time.
