

Against Forced Labor Camps! Demonstrate Nat'l Youth Day, May 30

BARRICADES IN BERLIN

THE STORY THUS FAR: The workers of the proletarian district, Wedding, in Berlin, demonstrate May Day, 1929, despite the ban issued by the Socialist Police Chief, Zoergelieb. The workers' demonstration is attacked by the police.

Shortly after 4 o'clock the decisive attack was made. Eight closed taxis drove at great speed one behind the other straight up to the barricades. The guards near the Nettelbeckplatz had allowed the taxis to pass in good faith.

Before the workers on the barricades could take cover policemen in plain clothes jumped out of the cars and opened a furious fire on the alley. They drove forward at the point of the revolver the thirteen workers who had fallen into their hands, and compelled them to tear down the barricades. The prisoners were used as cover against the shots of the workers. During the first attack Kurt had a small revolver—a mere toy in his large hands. Nevertheless he had felt he was not left completely helpless. Now, when he put his hands in his pocket he discovered to his despair that he had lost it when carrying it to the barricade.

Peng... it made quite a nice bang! The next one—peng...! He was soon an expert in detouring the cap by hitting it with a small stone. Now he placed three or four of the small copper things together. BANG! That sounded like something real.

On the landing above there a door opened and subdued voices were heard. Then slow, careful steps moved down the stairs as if they were carrying someone.

"That will be Otto," the girl said. "His mother does not know anything yet. She was told he had been sent out as a courier."

A torchlight flashed through the passage and stretched round the corner. As they crossed the yard towards the back door leading to the Panke, a window was opened. Someone leaned out and then closed it again, since it was too dark to see anything. The bearers of the wounded disappeared noiselessly through the back-yards. Stretcher-bearing came on all night.

"See that you get away yourself somewhere through the back-yards there," Kurt said to the girl. He pointed to an answer—she had gone. Curious he did not even know whom he had spoken to.

D A W N . . . "Bergen, why haven't those reports arrived yet?" "It is only ten minutes to six, sir." As he answered the police president, the official was trying with difficulty to sit straight in his chair. A number of telephones were standing in front of him. They were directly connected with the police headquarters on the Alexanderplatz.

"The Kid Was 12 When She Died"

By JOHN L. SPIVAK, ARTICLE V She was twelve years old when she died. The doctor said she got rheumatic fever from sleeping in a rain-soaked bed.

They took the child to a hospital from the coal barge moored off 123rd Street and the Harlem River wharf her parents and her little brothers and sisters looked on apathetically.

For twelve years the girl and two little brothers and a baby sister had lived on a barge. Some slept in the makeshift bed room furnished with things picked up at the city dumps.

"So he took them away. That very night he did." So children die on barges and the hospital records say "rheumatism" or "infection" and only the barge captain knows where the rheumatism and the infections come from.

Holy Kidnappers Sometimes "Jesus screamers," as the barge captains call the preachers, come aboard and try to take the children from the mothers to be put in homes. But even barge mothers have not lost the instinct for their brood and they fight desperately to keep their children.
