WAR IS NEAR!

The War is Near. The folly, the madness, the waste, the heedlessness, the impatience of the Allied nations in the face of a war of unprecedented dimensions, is becoming evident. The nations are living in a state of almost total seclusion, their eyes fixed only on the immediate problem of survival. Yet the true meaning of the war is not just in the immediate struggle for survival, but in the long-term implications for the future of mankind. The war is not just a struggle between nations, but a struggle for the survival of the human race.

WAGES AND WAR

By W. L. ROHADS

During the war, wages have been substantially increased in many countries. In this issue, we will explore the reasons behind this increase and examine the impact it has had on the economy.

The Shortage of Labor

One of the main reasons for the increase in wages has been the shortage of labor. The war has caused many men to leave their jobs to join the military, leaving a shortage of workers in many industries. This shortage has led to an increase in wages in order to attract workers to the remaining jobs.

The Impact on the Economy

The increase in wages has had a significant impact on the economy. It has led to an increase in consumer spending, which has helped to stimulate economic growth. However, it has also led to an increase in inflation, which has been a concern for many economists.

The Future of Wages

As the war comes to an end, it is likely that wages will decrease. However, it is also possible that they will remain high due to the continued shortage of labor. It remains to be seen how the economy will adjust to the end of the war and the return of workers to their jobs.

The New Hamilton Deal

The New Hamilton Deal, with its emphasis on free trade and the protection of American industry, has been praised by many as a visionary approach to economic policy. However, it is also controversial, with some arguing that it has led to a decline in domestic consumption and a decrease in the standard of living for many Americans.

An Old Mind at Oppenheimer

In a recent interview, General Oppenheimer, the former head of the Oppenheimer Corporation, expressed his views on the current state of the company. He argued that the company's focus on profits has led to a neglect of the needs of its employees and customers. He called for a return to the values of the company's founders, who placed the needs of the community above profits.

Peace Commissions

By IYIYE ASIKI

Peace commissions are a vital part of the international system for resolving conflicts. They are bodies composed of experts or neutral third parties who are charged with investigating and mediating disputes between states or non-state actors. The primary goal of peace commissions is to help negotiate settlements that bring an end to conflicts and promote lasting peace.

The importance of peace commissions cannot be overstated. They provide a forum for dialogue and negotiation, allowing conflicting parties to express their concerns and aspirations. Through their work, peace commissions can help create a climate of trust and understanding, which is essential for the successful conclusion of peace negotiations.

Peace commissions come in various guises. Some are established by international organizations such as the United Nations, while others are created by regional organizations or ad hoc bodies set up specifically for a particular conflict. They may be mandated to provide technical assistance, to facilitate dialogue, or to act as mediators in the negotiation process.

A peace commission is typically comprised of individuals with expertise in international law, diplomacy, or conflict resolution. They may include representatives from governments, international organizations, or civil society groups. The selection of members is often guided by the need to ensure a balance of interests and to reflect the diverse perspectives involved in a conflict.

Peace commissions are often considered a vital tool in the prevention and resolution of armed conflicts. They can help to prevent disputes from escalating into full-scale wars by providing a platform for parties to engage in dialogue and seek peaceful solutions. In this way, peace commissions contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security.

In conclusion, peace commissions play a crucial role in the international system by facilitating dialogue and negotiation, and by helping to create conditions for sustainable peace. Their importance cannot be overstated, and they should continue to be a key component of the tools available to the international community for addressing and resolving conflicts.
A Letter... To Our Readers

New York, N.Y.
February 1, 1934

Dear Friends,

About two weeks ago we wrote a personal letter to all of our subscribers. We had a very gratifying response. Now we are writing a similar letter to you who buy FIGHT at the newsstands, bookstores or meetings.

Those of us who are working on the magazine—building it into a militant publication in the struggle against War and Fascism—are wondering what you, as a reader of FIGHT and thinking about the magazine.

Write and tell us what you think of the stories and articles, the photographs and cartoons, the general make-up. We have tried to build a magazine, both in appearance and content different from most militant publications. Have we succeeded? In telling us what you like about the magazine and in making suggestions for further changes and additions, you will help us in making FIGHT a better and more effective weapon in the struggle against War and Fascism.

One thing more. You as a reader, realize the difficulties confronting a publication such as ours. How to secure new readers is a daily problem. Have you subscribed? Will you help us get new subscriptions? By subscribing you save some money. You get the magazine on time. You help us financially. Will you subscribe immediately? Will you secure during the next two weeks three new subscriptions? We need your help. We are depending upon it.

And won't you write to tell us at the same time, what you think of the magazine?

Fraternally yours,

FIGHT Against War and Fascism

There Are No Angels Backing Us

At the cost of personal sacrifices on the part of volunteer workers, members of our office staff, League officers and a few good friends, the work of building a United Front movement against War and Fascism has been initiated.

Organizational progress is reported from such key cities as Pittsburgh, Chicago, San Francisco, Erie, Buffalo, etc.

But this is only a beginning. Help us penetrate into every city and farm community in the United States. We could do more organization work if we could spend less time trying to raise money for elementary necessities.

Our overhead for rent, telephone, wages, postage, stationery, comes to only five hundred dollars a month.

Will you help us pay this small overhead (unusually small for a national organization) so our energies could be released for organizational work?

Will you send us one dollar a month for the next year? Will you help us build the "invincible ranks against War and Fascism"?

Send your first dollar now and your pledge to:
