YOUR NEXT YEAR IN ART

WE'VE stolen a leaf from the almanac, which not only tells you what day it is but gives you advice on the conduct of life. Not that our 1938 calendar carries instructions on planting time. But every month of it does carry an illustration that calls you to the struggle for democracy and peace, that pictures your fellow fighters, and that gives you a moment's peace.

A GOOD calendar alone would be worth the price of only 25 cents. You get also the 12 works of art by America's outstanding artists. The contributors in the 1938 calendar are Charles Burchfield, A. Bierbaum, Wanda Gag, Hugo Gellert, Harry Goudhor, William Gropper, Zoltan Hach, Louis Loewowick, M. Pass, Georg Hassebo, Lynd Ward and Howard Bue. Our supply of calendars is limited.

January 1938, THE FIGHT
RING OUT THE OLD
RING IN THE NEW

THE OLD YEAR 1937 rolls into history, with its wars and rumors of wars, its Non-intervention Committee and citizens' committees, its Duke, subway series and sweepstakes winners. General Mola and J. Ramsay MacDonald, among others, have passed from our midst. The Dionne Quintuplets are a year older.

War is a year older. Fascism, likewise. So are the people.

THE FIGHT has fought for another year. Well, here we are! January, 1938. Not in a concentration camp. Neither are you.

Nearly all who were in concentration camps and Fascist prisons last January, still are—unless they have died. Some who were walking around, breathing the free air, are now in the prisons of Fascism.

Many who blew horns and threw confetti last New Year's Eve were blowing their last horns, for they are now dead, blasted out of this good life by the bombs and bullets of Fascism.

President Roosevelt has proposed collective action to restrain the aggressor nations, but in several quarters—most of them quite respectable—a "watchful waiting" policy is favored. While applauding the fact that mad dogs are running the streets, these parties feel that it would be foolish to attempt to restrain them, in much as mad dogs sometimes bite if not firmly restrained.

Forward from Pittsburgh

The People's Congress laid the basis for a powerful mass movement to halt war and Fascism... A noted delegate reports the achievements of America's mighty gathering

By James Waterman Wise

TO GRAVE the significance of the People's Congress for Democracy and Peace (Pittsburgh, November 26th-28th), it is first necessary to outline the national conditions under which it met. The world crisis which, in a sense, climaxes the entire fascist war against democracy in Europe, Spain's long struggle against Fascist invasion, China's heroic stand against Japanese aggression, Germany's colored theories, the actual withdrawal of Italy from the League of Nations, the Tokyo-Rome-Berlin pact of aggression against the democratic quarters—these considerations were never absent from the minds of the delegates. The Congress was therefore directly and indirectly ante litteram the interface between the struggle against Fascism and the struggle against war. The discussion climaxes the session, the debate of twenty-one talks under the chairmanship of Mr. Emery. The discussions were held and divisions reached.

Despite the growing menace of foreign war and domestic tyranny, however, the mood of the Congress was nothing but one of hopeful. Never was it more clear than in the closing words of the delegates that the Congress was the beginning of a mighty movement to halt war and Fascism. The vote of the delegates was an endorsement of the League of Nations and the United Nations, and a renunciation of all Fascist aggression. The delegates concluded that the only way to prevent war was to work for peace and to strengthen the authority of the League of Nations. What They Say About China

Three men in America give their opinions on the Far Eastern war. Two are of Japanese birth, one of Chinese. Yet the score is—Read the report of a significant interview.

By Berenice E. Noar

JAPAN has been a source of influence in China. There are a number of reasons for this. First of all, there is the growing influence of anti-Japanese sentiment in China, which threatens the peace of the Far Eastern powers. The Chinese, in particular, have been subjected to considerable pressure from Japan, which has been increasing in recent years. This pressure has taken various forms, ranging from economic sanctions to military threats.

They Were Dividing

"And back in the center of the first chapter, it's not enough. China was the aggressor. The Japanese were walking in their shoes. They had no choice but to fight, where they were attacked. What was the Japs doing?"

But wouldn't you say? I asked, initially. "It's the same thing. What the Japs have been doing is they've been protecting the peace of the Far Eastern powers. They're not aggressors, they're protectors."

"That's right," my friend said. "That's why the Japs have been doing their job. They've been defending the peace of the Far Eastern powers. They're not aggressors, they're protectors."

The Man From China

China Can Win

"No, what we're talking about is the Far Eastern powers. They have to do something to defend themselves, or the Japs will just go on in a line, like a train going straight down the track. They're not going to stop."

But what about China? I asked. "What about the Chinese?"

NOW comes the New Year, and the New York week of January, wherein all the stars look back toward and forward. Two views high pressure for the future, and projected practice to the past, and a good deal of juggling up and down-admission and denial.

Like among the stars, for 1927, such pictures as The Life of Emily Zita, The Good Earth, Dead End, Captain Hook, Fort Dix, the two Garbo films, Bulldog and Company. All among the stars, the proprietors of the Chinese below, the foreign monopolists of Berlin, Dorothy, The Eternal Maid and Missionary. Last among the stars, the two great scrum of Black Easel and Two Ways From; the idea of Paul Muni in both. The Wind, Earth and Zita, the tender, sagacious performances of Jane Darwell in Our Jazz, and the brilliant, truth-ful dream of Nikita Kourkina as the old princess in Adam's Rib.

Painting with Pride

There are the words to the song with which the screen can paint with pride as its contribution during the year. There are the good songs and the bad ones which will be cherished by the children for years, the banal and the beautiful, the words themselves, being not as important as the notes that shall be allowed to echo on the wax of all. There was the shock bower of Hollywood, the music of most of the garish curios and bric-a-brac, the breeding of words themselves, but not as important as the notes that shall be allowed to echo on the wax of all. Michigan editor — John Wilson, United Auto Workers

SPEcialized areas were reviewed by panel discussions, political and economic sessions and a variety of other meetings. In the industrial area, for example, the emphasis was on the importance of collective bargaining and the need for stronger labor unions. The sessions covered topics such as wages, working conditions, and union organizing.

A Friend in Need

AMERICAN legislation was the main topic of discussion at the conference. The battle of the battlefronts to save the New Deal's main principles, the battle of the battlefronts to save the New Deal's main achievements, the battle of the battlefronts to save the New Deal's main contributions to the American people, was one of the main topics of discussion.

The conference also discussed the role of labor unions in the economic recovery of the country. The importance of collective bargaining was emphasized, and the need for stronger labor unions to negotiate better working conditions for workers was highlighted.

A Council from Detroit

Saturday's meeting had a very special feature: it was attended by three of the most important leaders of the labor movement. The meeting was opened by the President of the United Auto Workers, who spoke about the importance of collective bargaining and the need for stronger labor unions. The meeting was then followed by a discussion on the role of labor unions in the economic recovery of the country.

The conference concluded with a speech by the President of the United Auto Workers, who called for a stronger labor movement and emphasized the importance of collective bargaining.

THE FIGHT, January 1934
A new spirit is moving below the Mason-Dixon line. Industrialism brought many evils, but unionism came right behind it—with education for the exploited working people. A native Southerner, fresh from a visit to her homeland, tells of schools for workers

Hope for the South

Change in Carolina

The sun had pulled up on the main street of a little mountain town to take on a look of Bebaska and when ten or a dozen or two were out in the street or on the sidewalks, the band was playing and the radios were blaring and the windows were open and the doors were open and the sun was shining and all the world was right.

Along the main street, there were no more people. The sidewalks were empty, the streets were empty. The only sound was the sound of the band playing and the radios blaring and the windows open and the doors open.

Journey to Industry

But the schools were full. The streets were full. The sidewalks were full. The doors were open and the windows were open and the sun was shining and all the world was right.

One of the most remarkable changes in recent living years was the change in the attitude of the workers towards education. The workers were no longer content to work in the factories and sweat all day and then go home to their families and have nothing to show for it. They wanted to learn and to improve themselves.

What Our Girls Learned

One young woman, who was working in a factory, decided to go back to school and get an education. She enrolled in a night school and studied different subjects, including English, history, and mathematics. She worked hard and eventually got a job in a better factory, where she could earn more money and have more freedom.

The Fight, January 1912

In the fight, January 1912, the workers were able to negotiate better working conditions and higher wages. They were able to form unions and stand up for their rights. The factories were no longer places of exploitation, but places of opportunity.

Political Realizations

What the politicians think of the workers' strength may be uncertain, but the workers themselves are determined to崛起. They have formed a political party, the Workers' Party, and are running candidates in the upcoming elections. They are determined to have a voice in the government and to make sure that their needs are met.

In the field of medicine, there are few topics that are more urgent than the need for better disease prevention and treatment. One of the major issues facing the medical community today is the growing problem of drug resistance. The use of antibiotics and other medications has led to the evolution of resistant strains of bacteria that are becoming increasingly difficult to treat. This is a major concern because it can lead to more severe infections and longer hospital stays, putting patients at risk of complications and even death.

Drug resistance is a complex issue that involves a variety of factors, including the overuse of antibiotics, the misuse of medications, and the lack of access to proper healthcare. To combat this problem, it is essential that we take a comprehensive approach that includes education, policy changes, and increased funding for research.

In this article, we will explore the causes of drug resistance and discuss some of the potential solutions to this pressing issue. We will also examine the role of antibiotics in modern medicine and discuss the importance of responsible use.

Drug resistance is a major threat to global health, and it is essential that we take immediate action to address this issue. By working together, we can ensure that future generations will have access to effective treatments and maintain the health of our communities.

Some Special Problems

To identify fully the causes of systemic bacterial infection in patients with severe burns, we need to understand the role of antibiotics in modern medicine and the importance of responsible use. We will also discuss the challenges associated with treating drug-resistant infections and the need for continued research.

In conclusion, drug resistance is a pressing issue that requires immediate attention. By taking a comprehensive approach that includes education, policy changes, and increased funding for research, we can work together to address this threat and ensure the health of our communities.

The Negro Question

"In our time the Negro is a little bit of the same as our white brothers. We believe we have the same rights and the same duties. We want to be treated as we treat others and we want others to treat us as we treat them."

The Negro is a valuable asset to our country and we must work together to achieve equality for all races.

Behind Fascist Brazil

"In Brazil, the Fascist regime has taken over. People are being forced to work long hours for low wages. The government is cracking down on unions and striking workers."

The situation in Brazil is grave, and we must do everything we can to support those fighting against Fascism.

The new name reflected the League's commitment to promoting peace and democracy, and the organization's leaders hoped that it would help to attract new members and support for their cause.

Youth Notes

By James Lerner

Tremendous success has been achieved by the American League of Peace and Democracy, especially in the last few months. The organization has grown rapidly, and its influence has spread far and wide. As a result, the League has been able to take on a more active role in promoting peace and democracy.

The League's American League of Peace and Democracy has been particularly active in promoting peace and democracy in areas where there have been conflicts or where there is a risk of conflict. In these areas, the League has been able to work with local organizations to promote peace and to support democratic institutions.
