Why Railroad Workers Are Demanding Wage Increases

Chicago, Ill. — Negotiations on wage increases for the railroad workers' union began in Chicago today, with the railroad workers' union demanding a wage increase of 30 cents per hour. The union also claims that the railroad companies have failed to present any evidence of the economic difficulties that they are experiencing.

The union further states that the railroad companies are trying to meet their financial obligations by lowering the wages of the railroad workers, which is unfair to the railroad workers and to the community at large.
