Blair's Latest Move: Backs Company Union against CIO Locals 544 and 1140 at Greenway-Waverly

The day before his resignation last Tuesday to accept the position of "labor relations expert" with the labor-hunting Baldwin Company, Blair formulated his final act of labor betrayal and facsimile for his new employers.

Unable to explain away Blair's actions, despite the &quot;unanimous&quot; opinion of the CIO labor committee that "Blair's actions cannot be justified," the company announced he would retire on January 31.

A Liberal Magazine Reviews the Facts Behind Prosecution of Twenty-Eight

The American Civil Liberties Union, the umbrella organization of the civil liberties movement, has been in the forefront of battles to uphold the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. In the current controversy, the ACLU has been involved in a number of ways. It has provided legal support for those challenging the constitutionality of the laws under which they were arrested. It has also engaged in public education and advocacy to inform the public about the issues involved.

The ACLU has been criticized for its support of the defendants in the Twenty-Eight case. Some have accused the ACLU of being too lenient in its treatment of those charged with sedition. Others have praised the ACLU for its commitment to the principles of the Bill of Rights and the Constitution.

The ACLU's position is that it is impossible to separate the facts of the case from the political context in which it occurred. The Twenty-Eight defendants were charged with sedition in the context of a broader movement to suppress dissent and to stifle free speech. The ACLU believes that it is essential to protect the rights of all those who challenge the government, regardless of their political views.

The ACLU's role in the Twenty-Eight case is part of its ongoing commitment to uphold the principles of the Bill of Rights and the Constitution. It remains committed to supporting those who challenge the government and to advocating for a society in which all individuals are free to express their ideas and to participate in the political process.
