MISSION AND FUNCTIONS OF THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

The Mission of Industrial Unionism

By PHILIP WRIGHT

The appeal of the organization of workers and the social and economic problems that confront the working class have long been recognized as the mission of the American labor movement. But the integration of these problems into a single and comprehensive program has only recently been achieved. The Industrial Union Bulletin is the official publication of the Industrial Workers of the World, which is dedicated to the proposition that the labor movement must be transformed into a single and comprehensive industrial union organization.

The Bulletin is published weekly and contains articles on current labor and social issues, as well as reports from the various branches of the union. It is also devoted to the promotion of solidarity among the working class and to the development of a class-conscious labor movement. The Bulletin is distributed free of charge to all members of the union.

The Bulletin is available in electronic format on our website, along with other resources for the working class and the labor movement. We encourage you to explore our website and to engage with our content to further our mission of solidarity and class-consciousness.

MAY FIRST—INTERNATIONAL LABOR DAY

Industrial Unionism World-Wide

As a world-wide movement, industrial unionism has achieved significant gains in recent years. The following is a brief history of industrial unionism as seen from different regions of the world.

In the United States, the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) was founded in 1905 and has been a leader in the labor movement since then. The IWW has a strong presence in the mining, logging, and agriculture industries, and has been instrumental in the fight for workers' rights and basic human rights.

In Europe, industrial unionism has been a significant force in the development of socialist and communist parties. The organizations that arose out of the Industrial Union movement in Europe played a key role in the development of the working class movement in that continent.

In Asia, the Industrial Union movement has also had a significant impact. The Indian National Congress, founded in 1885, was a leader in the industrial union movement in India.

In Latin America, the Industrial Union movement has been a significant force in the development of labor movements. The movement has been instrumental in the fight for workers' rights and basic human rights.

In Africa, the Industrial Union movement has been a significant force in the development of labor movements. The movement has been instrumental in the fight for workers' rights and basic human rights.

The Bulletin is available in electronic format on our website, along with other resources for the working class and the labor movement. We encourage you to explore our website and to engage with our content to further our mission of solidarity and class-consciousness.

This Bulletin is distributed free of charge to all members of the union. PREAMBLE OF THE I.W.W.

The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. Their interests are diametrically opposed. The working class has no interest whatever in the upholding of the employing class. The working class and the employing class are in a class war, and it is quite expressible that this war will end only when class distinctions are abolished and the two classes have become one class.

The rapid gathering of wealth and the centering of the control of industry in fewer and fewer hands make the trade unions unable to cope with the ever-grown power of the employing class, because the unions are incapable of organizing a large enough body of workers to make them a substantial factor in the industrial field, and take and hold that which they have by their labor through the methods of the working class, without afflicting with any political party.

This fact is one of the reasons why the working class should organize independent of all political parties. The independent labor organization is the only kind that can organize labor, and be representative of all workers, without afflicting with any political party, and the only kind that can tend toward the complete abolition of the employing class and the establishment of a society without classes.

The general conventions of the Industrial Workers of the World, therefore, are organized for the purpose of uniting all workingmen for the purpose of carrying on a common and united struggle for a better world with the workingmen of the world.

The following is a detailed report of the work of the I.W.W. The reports and resolutions adopted by the conventions and the various sections of the I.W.W. have been compiled from the various reports of the officers and delegates, and are placed in the hands of the delegates of the conventions. They contain a summary of the work accomplished by the I.W.W. The reports and resolutions are published in this pamphlet for the purpose of informing the members of the I.W.W. of the work done during the year.
