DIRECT ACTION

All of the moves of the white power structures have been in real life getting in a larger share of the total wealth produced by all to be enjoyed by a small, privileged few. This letter is a call to the American working class to organize the radical action to redress the conditions now prevailing. It is not in the interest of the working class to go in for "charity" work. The right to live is the right of all. And the right to the best of life must be won by direct action. The struggle is not to be waged merely by legal and constitutional means. It must be fought by the working class. And the working class must fight through its own organizations and not through any other class or person as himself may have a chance to earn or gain. The class of working people by organizing and by direct action can better the conditions of the workers in the sense of a better social class. Fat Preachers and Thin Workers

For Fred W. Houseworth, virtuousness is the most defining feature of his trade. It’s not just about saving the world and preventing the spread of sin, but also about living a life that is free from the moral and physical burdens that come with being a preacher. And, as he reminds us, it’s not easy to be a fat preacher...

In the early morning hours, Fred is up and at attention, ready to take on the challenges of the day. He’s dressed in his signature robe and collar, and he’s already started his morning prayers. He spends hours in silent meditation, seeking guidance from his higher power. It’s a necessary part of his daily routine, and he takes it very seriously. He couldn’t imagine doing it any other way...

As the sun begins to rise, Fred heads out to his church, where he will spend the day teaching and preaching to his congregation. He’s been doing this for years, and it’s become second nature to him. He loves his job, even if it does mean living a life of simplicity.

In his free time, Fred enjoys painting and writing poetry. He finds inspiration in the beauty of nature and the depths of human emotion. It’s a way for him to express his faith and his passion for life.
