TO HELP THE UNION
AND HELP YOURSELF

- In every industrial center, and especially in the Northwest, there is a great need for a labor exchange, or industrial bureau, where workers who are unemployed can obtain information about jobs. In many places, these bureaus are operated by the local unions or the Industrial Workers of the World. They provide information about available jobs, wages, working conditions, and the general labor market. This helps workers to find employment and improve their economic situation.

- The strike at the Wallacross Steel Company in Seattle was a major event in the Northwest. Workers at the company went on strike in July 1909, demanding better wages and working conditions. The strike lasted for several weeks and eventually led to a victory for the workers. This was a significant victory for labor in the Northwest and it inspired other strikes in the region.

- The Industrial Worker, published by the Industrial Workers of the World, was a major labor publication in the early 20th century. It was founded in 1907 and continued to publish until 1917. The magazine covered a wide range of labor issues, including strikes, labor unions, and workers' rights.

- The American Federation of Labor (AFL) was a major labor union in the United States during the early 20th century. It was founded in 1886 and continued to operate until 1955. The AFL was composed of a number of independent unions, each representing a different industry or profession. The AFL was known for its strong opposition to socialism and its support for capitalism.

- The IWW was a major labor organization in the United States during the early 20th century. It was founded in 1905 and continued to operate until 1940. The IWW was known for its radical politics and its support for direct action and class struggle.

- The Wobblies, as the IWW was known, played a major role in the labor movement during the early 20th century. They were known for their radical politics and their support for direct action and class struggle. The Wobblies were active in a number of industries, including mining, logging, and railroading.

- The Black Sox Scandal was a major event in American baseball in 1919. Eight players on the Chicago White Sox were accused of throwing the World Series in order to receive bribes from gamblers. The players were later convicted and served time in prison.

The Industrial Worker is published by workingmen. We have no stockholders or investors. We are not sponsored by any party, company, union nor corporation. We are not beholden to any power but the people. We have no political obligations. We are independent of all political and business organizations. Our only connection is with the workingmen, and that connection is one of sympathy and service.

It is 11:30 a.m. and the sun is shining brightly. A group of women is standing in front of a large building, talking and laughing. The building is the headquarters of the Women's Industrial Workers of the World (WIW).

An appeal for solidarity

"An appeal to one in an army to all. It is not a sentimental appeal. It is a practical appeal. It is a direct appeal to every person in a working-man's shop—whatever his trade or profession, or position or political beliefs. It is a direct appeal to every person in a working-man's shop to get into the struggle and fight for the right of his fellow-workers.

It is not necessary to be a "comrade," to be one of this struggle. One can join the fight and be a part of this struggle without being a "comrade." The fight for a better day has been led by the working-man for years, but it has been led by the working-man without any organized force. It is now time for the working-men to organize their force. It is now time for the working-men to fight for their rights and for their lives.

The ISW of the W. W. W. is the labor union of the working-class. We have only one issue, one trade, and one class—every working-man is a member of our union. We are not a political party, a religious group, or a charitable organization. We are a union of working-men to fight for the right of every working-man to organize and to fight for his rights.

The appeal for solidarity is not just a call for action. It is a call for education. It is a call for knowledge. It is a call for understanding. It is a call for solidarity. It is a call for unity. It is a call for the working-men of the world to come together and fight for their rights.

The appeal for solidarity is not just a call for the working-men of the world to come together and fight for their rights. It is a call for the working-men of the world to come together and fight for the future of the world. It is a call for the working-men of the world to come together and fight for the freedom of all men. It is a call for the working-men of the world to come together and fight for the world of tomorrow.
