The Industrial Worker is a weekly newspaper published by the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW). The IWW was a radical labor union formed in 1905, and the newspaper was used to publicize the union's activities and goals. The IWW was known for its advocacy of direct action, including strikes, boycotts, and other forms of protest, as well as its pacifist stance against war. The IWW and its newspaper played a significant role in the labor movement of the early 20th century, advocating for workers' rights and challenging the status quo. The IWW and its newspaper were also targets of government and business opposition due to their radical views and activism. The IWW and its newspaper eventually disbanded in the 1920s due to a combination of legal harassment, financial struggles, and internal conflicts. However, the IWW legacy and principles continued to influence later labor movements and radical activism.
