HAIL TO THE FIRST OF MAY

THE WORKER AND THE POLITICIAN BEFORE AND AFTER ELECTION

THE THING WE ARE UP AGAINST

EXPLODED.

Five States, California Fall.--The Worker, May 30, 1913.

J. MORSE BROOKFORD, ENGLAND.

In the Working Post for February last, there appeared an article by Mr. Morse Brockford, Professor of Economics at the University of London, about a striking demonstration by the IWW, the Workers' Union, as it has come to be known in the United States, and the IWF, the International Workers' Federation, as it is known in Europe. Mr. Morse Brockford is one of the worst lapse in history. In his article, he does not attempt to explain why the strike should happen, but simply states that it is all because of this or that class rule. He does not attempt to explain why the strike should happen, but simply states that it is all because of this or that class rule. His argument is, in effect, that the strike is caused by the production of commodities and their distribution, and that this is the reason why industrial conflicts occur.

The worker and the politician are the two main classes in society. They are the ones who make the decisions, and they are the ones who are most affected by those decisions. The politician is the one who makes the laws, and the worker is the one who must live under those laws. The politician is the one who makes the policies, and the worker is the one who must live under those policies. The politician is the one who makes the plans, and the worker is the one who must live under those plans.

The politicians and the workers are in a constant struggle. The politicians want to make policies that will benefit them, and the workers want to make policies that will benefit them. The politicians want to make policies that will benefit the rich, and the workers want to make policies that will benefit the poor. The politicians want to make policies that will benefit the big corporations, and the workers want to make policies that will benefit the small businesses.

The working class is a very large one, and it is made up of all the people who work for a living. The working class is made up of all the people who work for a living, and they are all affected by the policies that are made by the politicians.

The politicians are the ones who make the decisions, and they are the ones who are most affected by those decisions.
