Under capitalism the workers have no rights except as they are willing to give them up. Only organized working-class action can prevent the present system of exploitation.

It is still very much of an animal. It kicks a dog, yet it kicks its own head.

Once the masters perceive the struggle, sooner or later the workers perceive the right to work for a master.

Between the two classes, the one which produces and the other which consumes, lies a gulf as vast and as unbridgeable as that between the iron and the air.

It isn’t enough to jot a labor union here, your name, a click of the pen, and to have the next generation inherit it as a matter of course. A man who wants to have it for himself must produce and get it for himself as a matter of fact, as a result of his own work. Today, as tomorrow, everything is done by labor. All active, cooperative, aggressive work is in the interests of labor. The struggle for better wages is the vital issue of the age. It is the struggle to win the right to life in the measure of work performed.

A labor organization in the working-class struggle, and to be a real benefit to this class, must not only aim to control the men, but also control the shops. This means to control the shops, or to control the men who control the shops. The men must be organized so as to control the shops.

The Industrial Labor Union of Great Falls, Mont., is taking the lead in this movement. They have set up a union contract which they are going to enforce.

The best way to organize a trade union is to first organize the individual worker. This can be done in the following way:

1. Organize a local union.
2. Get a local union for each shop.
3. Get a local union for each district.
4. Get a local union for each country.
5. Get a local union for each continent.
6. Get a local union for each world.

After these local unions have been organized, they can be united into a national union, and the national union can be united into a world union.

The first step towards organizing a labor union is to organize a local union. This can be done in the following way:

1. Organize a local union for each shop.

INDUSTRIAL IDEA VS. THE POLITICAL

We often hear the argument, even from labor leaders, that the workman's desire to improve his wages and working conditions constitutes a political force. What we are seeing throughout the country is the political game, not the industrial one, that results in the lowering of the laborer's standard of living.

The fact that the workers do not unite for a collective bargaining process, that they fail to elect representatives who will demand a better wage for all workers, and that they fail to organize a political force to support labor, is the result of the political game.

Workers are being kept in the dark about the real issue at stake. They are being told that the political game is the only way to improve their standard of living. This is a lie. The only way to improve the workers' standard of living is to organize a political force that will demand a better wage for all workers.

The height that L. N. W. men will go in this election clearly is not determined by the judicial, the political, or the economic issues that are now before them. It is determined by the industrial issues.

In this election, the workers are not being asked to decide on the political issues. They are being asked to decide on the industrial issues. The workers are being asked to decide on the industrial issues because they are the only issues that matter to the workers.

However, the workers are not being asked to decide on the industrial issues because they are not being asked to decide on the political issues. They are being asked to decide on the political issues because they are the only issues that matter to the workers.

DOING AWAY WITH MILL

The help that I get from L. N. W. men in this election will not come from their positions as workers, but from their positions as political leaders.

The help that I get from L. N. W. men in this election will come from their positions as political leaders. They will be able to help me in this election because they are the only leaders that matter to the workers.

INDUSTRIAL WORKER, Middletown, Conn.

DIRECT ACTION

The Chicago Citizens’ Union is reporting that the strike in the timber industry in Illinois is still continuing. The workers have voted to continue the strike until all of their demands are met, including a raise in wages and improvements in working conditions.

The workers have been on strike for several weeks, and the company has refused to negotiate. The workers are determined to remain on strike until their demands are met. They are willing to continue the strike for as long as it takes.

The strike is supported by the International Woodworkers of America, and the workers have received support from other labor unions. The union leadership is urging the workers to remain steadfast in their determination to achieve their goals.

The company has been accused of using heavy-handed tactics to try to break the strike, including the use of private security guards and the threat of violence. The workers have responded by strengthening their resolve and determination.

The strike is expected to continue for several more weeks, and the outcome is uncertain. The workers are hoping for a swift resolution, but they are prepared to continue the strike for as long as necessary.
