LUMBER WORKERS
GAINING GROUND

The Grays Harbor strike has been on for a month. While the workmen are not as yet strong enough to meet the employers as yet, the fact that they are gathering strength is evident. Already some signs of a settled strike have appeared. The situation is clearly advancing toward a peaceful settlement.

The workers are determined to secure a fair wage, and they are not afraid of the employers' threats to fire men who support them. The workmen have the backing of the public, and they are confident of success.

Nevertheless, the situation is not yet completely resolved. There are still many issues that need to be addressed, and the employers are not backing down easily.

The workers are hopeful, but they realize that the struggle is far from over.
They are prepared to continue fighting til they get what they want.

Two More Men Murdered in San Diego

I have just seen a letter from one of the Lumber Workers of the District. It is a story of the most vivifying and inspiring heroism that has been seen in years. The men were brave and true heroes, and they ever gave up until they were successful.

The men were driven from a family by armed bandsmen to their home, where they met with an unexpected attack. They fought bravely, and at last the bandmen were turned back.

The men were not killed, but they were severely wounded. Their bravery has inspired all the workers in the District, and they have resolved to continue the struggle until victory is attained.

The city is full of members of the strike, and it is not certain that they are happy.

The treatment of Fellow Workers Don Parmelee and Emery Young has been very rough. The Seattle police are acting arbitrarily.
