CONTRACTORS CAN'T BREAK STRIKE—STRIKERS REMAIN PEACEFUL

The fourth week of the railway construction controversy in the Northwest has found the strikers outstanding in every respect. The issue is between the workers and the railroad company. The company is trying to force the men to work at wages lower than the national minimum wage. The strikers are fighting for their rights and trying to win their demands.

In the meantime, the police have arrested many of the strikers. However, the strikers have remained peaceful and have not engaged in any violence.

The strike has been going on for almost a month. The workers have been without work for almost a month. The company has offered to settle the strike, but so far the workers have refused to accept the company's offer.

The strike continues to be peaceful and non-violent. The workers have not resorted to any form of violence.

LUMBER WORKERS TYPING THE CAMPS

For two weeks now a strike has been in progress in the camps among Puget Sound, as so hastily it has appeared that very few people are aware that a real struggle is going on. Over a thousand lumbermen have responded to the strike call and have joined the ranks of the striking workers. The strike is no longer confined to the Puget Sound area, but has spread to other parts of the state.

The strike has been caused by the low wages paid to the lumbermen. The company has been offering wages that are below the national minimum wage.

The lumbermen have been demanding a wage increase and have been refusing to work for the low wages offered by the company. The strike continues to be peaceful and non-violent.

The industrial worker's struggle for better working conditions and improved wages is a significant aspect of labor history. This image appears to be a page from a historical document discussing the working conditions and rights of industrial workers. The text mentions the Industrial Worker newspaper, the Industrial Workers of the World, and the role of newspapers in labor movements.

The text highlights the importance of newspapers in educating workers about their rights and in organizing labor movements. It emphasizes the need for better wages and working conditions for industrial workers. The document also touches on the role of newspapers in providing news and information to workers, helping them to make informed decisions about their labor conditions.

The text further discusses the role of newspapers in providing a platform for workers to express their grievances and demands. It mentions the importance of collective action and the need for workers to organize and stand together to improve their working conditions.

Overall, the document underscores the power of the press in advocating for workers' rights and in shaping the course of labor history.
EXPERIENCE FAILS TO TEACH.
