Machine Guns at Merryville

Special dispatch to the Industrial Worker, Lawrence, Mass., Jan. 16, 1913. Merryville, a suburb of Lawrence, is now a scene of concerted militancy against A. L. Ewbank and his associates in the northern textile cities. The strikers should hold him personally responsible for any grievances during the holiday season. Another attempt is being made to start a riot among the strikers in Lawrence. The workers are being encouraged to carry arms and to establish a sindicate of machine guns in the various communities. The strikers have received from the American Labor Committee two thousand dollars as a war chest. Three thousand dollars was received from the American Labor Committee for the defense of the strike leaders. The strike leaders have been in discussion with the strike leaders of the Southern Pacific Railroad Corporation in order to make the time for the completion of their strike effective.

The local union in Lawrence is now in a strong position to carry on a more effective strike. It is the only union in the country that has received a substantial amount of money from the American Labor Committee.

Frisco Tailors Double-Crossed!

By Thomas McConnell, Jr.

There are still some of the old-time tailors in the tailoring trade in San Francisco.

They stood a chance as the labor organizations were being formed against the saloon for a long time.

The craft, however, had to make a big effort-get these tailors into their organizations. The tailors objected to watching the hands of the books as a means of keeping a check on the hand labor.

The effort to organize the tailors was made by Mr. Harry M. Cheadle and the Tailors' Local Union No. 14, San Francisco.

The organization was to be known as the "Tailors' Union of San Francisco." The union was to have a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and at least one member on the executive committee of each local union.

There was a branch of the tailors' union in the city of Los Angeles, and a branch of the tailors' union in Los Angeles, which was to be known as the "Tailors' Union of Los Angeles, California." The organization was to have a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and at least one member on the executive committee of each local union.

The tailors kept crying;

"We're learning the tailors' craft.

And the boys did 9-0."

The tailors' union is the outgrowth of the "Tailors' Union of San Francisco," which was formed in 1875, and the "Tailors' Union of Los Angeles, California," which was formed in 1879.

The tailors' union is the oldest labor organization in the United States.

Mr. Harry M. Cheadle, president of the "Tailors' Union of San Francisco," had established the union in 1875, and the "Tailors' Union of Los Angeles, California," had established the union in 1879.
