In the Three Hundred Thousand Lumber Workers in the Pacific Northwest

Nothing is on strike in the lumbering district. The wages are the same as before, and the workers are not satisfied with them. The strike is due to the fact that the employers are not willing to meet the demands of the workers.

The strike is not only affecting the workers in the lumber industry, but it is also having an effect on the general economy of the country. The shortage of lumber is making it difficult for industries to operate, and the high cost of lumber is putting a strain on the consumer.

The dispute centers around the question of wages and working conditions. The workers are demanding an increase in wages and better working conditions, while the employers are offering only a small increase.

The strike is expected to continue until both parties reach an agreement. In the meantime, the workers are continuing their strike and refusing to work.

In the meantime, the federal government has been called in to mediate the dispute. However, it is not expected that a solution will be reached immediately, and the strike is likely to continue for some time.

The strike has been underway for several weeks, and it is not clear when it will end. The workers are determined to achieve their goals, and they are not willing to give up without a fight.

The effects of the strike are being felt throughout the country, and it is likely that the economy will continue to suffer until a resolution is reached.
