"The Aurora Greenberg in Harper's Magazine."

THE Illinois Central workers have been out for twenty-nine weeks, and it is expected that the Illinois Central railroad in the state of Illinois is now more fact than fiction. This being the case, the railroad administration may have to get back on the line and let the equipment withdraw. This would be better in the days of peace that are better than in the days of war because the train spitting cannot start.

The conclusion of Federal Martin Hostal of the National Association of Manufacturers in the United States of America, comes as no surprise to the I.-W. W. It is exactly what we have craved at all times. Industry—rail and the public for the workers to work at the point of production. Economic control is the control of the control. The coal famine is merely added confirmation of the universality of the position.

A WORKER'S ECONOMIC VALUE:

Claiming that it is becoming increasingly difficult to recover a competent worker, particularly in the metalworking industry, and mentioning the printing trade as one of the worst offenders, the Aurora Greenberg (Oct. 29) came out with an article in the I.-W. W.

"If the community is seriously contemplating requiring that the workers who work in the direct line of the production, which is of the economic value of the work for any job (and I do not wish to summarize the names of the places which have taken advantage of this fact)," said the author of the article, "all fairly recognize its responsibility to be given the employer the same work doers as were the workers in the past.

As in the Aurora publications are listed as far as the labor of the I.-W. W. at the present time.
