The Return from Toil.
THE MASSES

A FREE MAGAZINE

THIS MAGAZINE IS OWNED AND PUBLISHED CO-OPERATIVELY BY ITS EDITORS. IT HAS NO DIVIDENDS TO PAY, AND NOBODY IS TRYING TO MAKE MONEY OUT OF IT. A REVOLUTIONARY AND NOT A REFORM MAGAZINE; A MAGAZINE WITH A SENSE OF HUMOR AND NO RESPECT FOR THE RESPECTABLE; FRANK, ARROGANT, IMPERTINENT, SEARCHING FOR THE TRUE CAUSES; A MAGAZINE DIRECTED AGAINST RIGIDITY AND DOGMA WHEREVER IT IS FOUND; PRINTING WHAT IS TOO NAKED OR TRUE FOR A MONEY-MAKING PRESS; A MAGAZINE WHOSE CIVIL POLICY IS TO DO AS IT PLEASES AND CONCILIATE NOBODY. NOT EVEN ITS READERS—THERE IS A FIELD FOR THIS PUBLICATION IN AMERICA. HELP US TO FIND IT.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES
Yearly, $1.00  Half Yearly, 50 Cents

Bundle Rates and Newsdealers
Not less than 5, at 3 cents splice non-returnable, at 7 cents returnable.
Published Monthly at 91 Greenwich Ave., New York. Entered as second-class mail matter, December 27, 1910, at the postoffice of New York City, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Anna M. Sloan, Business Mgr.

IF YOU HAVE A FRIEND
Who you think would like
"The Masses,"
SEND US HIS NAME
Or get after him yourself.

Tricked

Said Finnegan to Casey, as he handed him his change: "'Tis ashamed Oi am this mornin' fur me blimdher. An incident threeshred in this barroom yeobuicred—Oi was thricked, an' 'tis almost made me mad as thimber. Y' know th' Orish Wur-rid an' th' Avenin' Sibarr-Gazette an' all Oi ever rade or give attishun; an' the' Oi pungle up me nickel fur th' War-Cry won't a wake, 'tis a fact to Fyther Burns Oi seldom minishun. So pshwin a lad shfeed in here in the early afternoon an' went in, did Oi want a buy "Th' Masses," Oi immediately concluded 'twas a Cal'dic rival shute, an' in me bagshet I buy Oi broke shrey glasses. Shure Maze is pshwout Oi thawt av, only in its ploroom forum, an' Oi thawt Oi'd have some very plesant radin', but th' divil a war-rid a-tall did Oi rade about th' Church, jest th' suflin' av th' poor man an'his pladin'. 'Twas Shosballin', an' Anarchistin', an' everythin' that's bad; shure av al these things 'twas nawthin' but a mixin'. Faith, th' fursh thign that Oi noo, Oi had read naythin' but throur, an' begorra Oi belove this war-rid needs fixin'!"

Frank A. Curtin.

FIRST LOVE

BY

LOUIS UNTERMeyer

A sequence of seventy-three non-social but none the less inspiring lyrics.

The poet crowds into his lines the high delights and deep despair of passion, and always with a dignity that honors his theme—even as the fire ennobles the gold.—Edwin Markham in the N. Y. American.

A sequence of verses, with something of the real ecstasy of love and the despair of loss in them. . . . The effect is dramatic in the extreme—action, picture, reflection, exquisite choral comment, all compact in lyrical measures—and the poet quite justified in making himself a part of the play. . . .—The Independent.

We are ashamed in the presence of the fresh, frank abandon of rose-white passion caroling its heart out unashamed to the world. Such a burst of song is "First Love."—T. A. Daly in the Philadelphia Standard & Times.

. . . He is more worthy reading and watching than any other singer who has appeared in a decade . . . It would not surprise us if he should presently be acclaimed as the most significant American poet since the passing of the famous old New England group. . . .—North Carolina Review.

SHERMAN, FRENCH & CO.
Boston, Mass.
A FARMER'S WOMAN

John Reed

I know a patient, nobly-curving hill
That wears a different paleness every hour,—
Copper by sun, grey-velvet through a shower,—
Topaz and mauve,—blue of the heron's quill.
Forever mean-souled ploughmen scar the soil,
And bind, with rambling stony walls, her breast—
Never allow her weary womb to rest,
Nor give a moment's peace for all her toil.

O, if the ploughmen knew what wonders spring
From fields that for a season fallow lie—
Under the healing hand of wind and sky—
Would they not grant her time for flowering!
Her heart is rock. I wonder if her tongue
Knows how to say "I also once was young"?
"THEY WHO BEND TO POWER AND LAP ITS MILK."

Dedicated to Educators
Editors
Lawyers
Legislators
Ministers

By Arthur Young
Concerning an Idealism

I RARELY sit down to meditate these paragraphs that there does not float back to my mind the memory that I might have become a Christian minister. I might be pondering upon my weekly exhortation to the conscience. Up to the age of eighteen I was a minister’s son. And I was the son of an orthodox minister but of a natural heretic, so the possibility of my liking and choosing a hortatory profession was never remote. However, I am not going to write an autobiography. I only set out to say that I have by inheritance a peculiar sympathy with those moralists who are shocked and disturbed by what appears in The Masses. I understand how they feel.

All through the ages it has been the tacit assumption of idealistic people that by dint of preaching they could make men unnaturally “good.” They could make the rich altruistic and the poor either prudent or content with an humble lot, and so solve the inequalities and ultimately remove the bondages and miseries of men. And to those who have given themselves to this labor, or to those who give an hour or two of one day in each week to the emotions attending this labor, it is naturally abhorrent to see before their face every month such a publication as The Masses.

For here is all the joy and the glamour of idealism attending a labor which directly opposes that to which they have looked for the salvation of the world. We do not teach that the rich must be altruistic and the poor prudent or content with their lot. We teach that since the rich will not be altruistic to the extent of relinquishing their essential privilege, it is necessary for the poor to be ill content, to be imprudent, to marshal themselves against the rich, and relying on their superior numbers to take from them the sources of their privilege. We put our trust not in the propagation of altruistic sentiments among all, but in the enlightenment of the self-interest of the poor. We put our trust in this for the salvation of the world.

And how disturbing this must be to the preachers of emotional brotherhood we can easily conceive. And while we do not wish to make it less disturbing, or narrow the gulf that separates us from them, we do wish to extend to them this word of information: That while we may sound grim and polemic, we are as idealistic, we are as much moved by the highest hope, we are as much concerned over the salvation of the world, as they. Only we believe that this hope can never be achieved, except through a method which takes account of the fact that men are what they are.

We have studied history and economics, we have observed the men and conditions of our own time, and we have seen that the method of progress toward equality and fraternity is the struggle of the oppressed against their oppressors; and to that struggle, as it obtains in the twentieth century, we have committed ourselves for the sake of the ultimate ideal. We do not therefore hold ourselves to be either less or more idealistic than those who preach brotherhood as an artificial emotion and with no method for its achievement. We simply hold our idealism to be more scientific.

A Mild Protest

T HE New York Volkzeitung called these paragraphs “Syndicalistische.” We do not know why, but it may have been for no more profound reason than that a man named Mack Eastman, who also descended from the oracle on Morningside Heights, used to lecture about Syndicalism to the Socialist locals in New York. We owe a number of gentle epistles and several unrecorded bills to the same nominal confusion, and we are not loath to pass this little itische along to him.

Istische is the German for 1st, and while it sounds a little softer, and more adjective, it is just about as cramping to the free operation of the mind.

In choosing the title “Knowledge and Revolution” for these paragraphs, we intended a radical departure from the 1st Movement, which we consider the base of intelligentsia in this century. We meant to make a clean get-away from the whole case of pigeon-holes. And therefore, while thanking the Volkzeitung for those very kind remarks which sent us flying to our Wörterbuch, we are going to request a correction to the effect that these are not Syndicalist paragraphs. They are—if they must be hissed at all—Anti-ism-ist paragraphs.

The Mote and The Beam

Roosevelt reminds me of a mule with blinders on. Whatever way he happens to get directed, he will go straight that way, and neither see, guess, nor remember that there was ever any other way to go.

I imagine some conversational incident, or some accidental petulance, started him off on this Michigan man-hunt, and away he goes with a whole car-load of moral enthusiasts to establish the fact that he never drinks more than two mint-juleps at one and the same time.

Seems to me, if I were going to establish my character before a public tribunal, I’d make a strike for a bigger virtue than temperance. Why, even suppose he were a drunk and a glutton, he would only land in the fourth or fifth of the infernal circles—I’ve forgotten just which—whereas some of the other names this man has been called—and that by editors of his own size—would land him with Judas Iscariot in the Devil’s mouth beneath the frozen bottom of the lowest pit of hell—are we to assume that all the other libels of all the editors, except this one moderate little Michigan farmer, are true?

And then think of that noble army of Undesirable Citizens, Malefactors, Liars, and generally Vicious Characters that he has consigned to public ill-repute from his high chair at the White House. Suppose they should all descend upon him with a car-load of Saints and settlement workers, calling on him to back it all up with dates, places, and specifications?

There is humor in this big repudiation of a little calumny. There is humor in a mule with blinders on, but the mule can’t see it.

Funny?

The scholastic commentators of Don Quixote, when they strike a passage that transcends their utmost power to explain, will say in a footnote, “We think this must be a joke.” They have learned, you see, that Cervantes is a humorist.

I am reminded of this by a statement of John A. Slevicher, the publisher of Judge and Leslie’s Weekly, to the effect that the new tariff policy, if adopted, “will definitely decide that there are to be no more increases of wages in the United States at present, if ever.” Mr. Slevicher is the publisher of a funny paper, and I am inclined to conclude that this must be a joke.

Sign of the Times

Mother Jones pointed out in our Carnegie Hall meeting that in West Virginia last winter for the first time in this country the civil courts were superseded by a military tribunal in the effort of capitalists to get the leaders of a strike.
The Worst Monopoly

Up to the day of Senator Kern's speech in the Senate, how many people knew that a military despotism had prevailed for months in West Virginia? How many people knew that men were shooting each other a dozen at a time only 7 hours from the metropolis? How many knew that a strike was on in the Paint Creek section at all? For some secret reason West Virginia has hardly leaked a drop of news in the last fourteen months.

And that secret reason is the Associated Press.

I am told that every trust is to be encouraged to live its life and grow to such proportions that it may and must be taken over by the working public. But one trust that I find it impossible to encourage is this Truth trust, the Associated Press. So long as the substance of current history continues to be held in cold storage, adulterated, colored with poisonous intentions, and sold to the highest bidder to suit his private purposes, there is small hope that even the free and the intelligent will take the side of justice in the struggle that is before us.

The representative of the Associated Press was an officer in that military tribunal that hounded the Paint Creek miners into the penitentiary in violation of their constitutional liberties; and this fact is even more significant and more serious than the abrogation of those liberties. It shows that the one thing which all tribes and nations in time have held sacred—the body of Truth—is for sale to organized capital in the United States.

Happy Thought

J. C. ROTH, President of the Hotel Association of Illinois, said that an 8-hour law would force the women out of the hotels.

"The girl in a hotel doesn't work half as hard as the second maid or cook in a private family," said Mr. Roth. "Why not regulate their hours?"

Yes—why not?

Liberality Is Not Loose Thinking

"If you call yourself liberal-minded, then why do you stick to Socialism alone? Isn't that a dogma?"

"You say you don't believe in dogmatism—then why not open your columns to all the other radical reform movements?"

This question was asked in a letter from a personal friend. He did not give his name, but he had evidently read an editorial, and we know that only the personal friends of the editor do that. So we will treat him with humble courtesy and appreciation. Instead of telling him to go home and find out what Socialism is, we will try to explain to him at least one thing that Socialism is not. It is not a radical reform movement. It is not a movement that lies parallel to other schemes of social regeneration, only extending a little farther, or moving a little more impatiently. Not at all. Socialism is decidedly contradictory to them. It is not contradictory to them in its ultimate aim so much as in the means by which alone it believes that aim can be attained. It is contradictory to them in its method.

I handed a copy of The Masses to a man who came in to see me the other day. He looked it over. "That's too strong for me," he said. He got tangled up with John Sloan's and Art Young's memorable brutal flings at the present social order. He thought they went too far. Everybody goes too far to the man who's afraid to go out of the house. We need that going too far stuff in America. We've got all grades of art below the going too far stage. Now we need the tellers of unqualifying stories. We need the artists of the crude line. We need the men who are the same to the end. Sloan and Young are the same to the end. The Masses is the same to the end. . . . Taking it on the whole, as itstands, it's a vehement red-paint signal post.

—Horace Traubel in The Conservative.

Poisoned At The Source

Blackballed

It has been irrevocably decided that Jacques Loeb will not be allowed to sit under a little halo at the tables of the Century Club. Professor Cattell, who proposed him, thinks this is an expression of race prejudice. But there are Jewish people in the Century Club. The trouble with Jacques Loeb is that he will not confine his experimental attitude to home-made sea-urchins and jellyfish. He wants to apply the methods of science to the problems of society. He has confidence in the revolutionary hypothesis, and he stands ready publicly to promote every experiment that aims to verify it. And that—if I may adopt the attitude of those who rejected him—is worse than being a Jew.
OLD General Jim McGrew and old Admiral Henry Truefitt stood together on the Admiral's veranda, on Delaware street. It was December, but the day was warm. A little boy, the General's grandson, marched up to them, demanding to be amused.

"Play wiv me, grampa," he commanded.

General McGrew chuckled with pride.

"Play wiv me, too, Uncle Henry," said the boy to the Admiral.

The Admiral roared in triumph.

"Wants his old godfather, too," he remarked savagely to the General.

The General drew from behind him a toy drum. The Admiral, by some legerdemain, produced from nowhere a tiny full-rigged ship. The daily battle for the occupancy of one small boy's heart was on.

The boy hesitated between the two prizes held out to him.

"Don't hesitate!" bellowed the General. "You'll never win anything if you do. At Antietam—"

"Make up your mind quick!" said the Admiral, his blue eyes intense beneath his white brows. "Farragut!—"

The boy reached out both hands, one towards each bristling warrior's offering.

The two old men roared in glee.

"He ain't to be a soldier," said the General, "he'll run Wall Street."

The Admiral chuckled assent.

The boy's mother came out upon the porch. "What are you two old dears teaching my boy?" she smiled.

"Teaching him to be a man," said the Admiral grimly.

"And how?" asked the mother.

"Why, there ain't but one way," said the General, "that's to fight!"

The boy's mother looked troubled.

The boy, with the drum and the fragile now in his possession, was about to begin a combined offensive demonstration by land and sea, when he caught sight of a third old man, slouching timidly around the corner of the veranda from the rear.

"Oh, oh!" he screamed in ecstasy, "there Uncle Billy!"

And he hurled himself toward the newcomer.

The third old man caught the boy's chubby form as it leaped into his arms, and, grinning apologetically at the Admiral and the General, saluted each with a hand stiffly raised.

"Hadn't ought t' charge at me like that, Henry," he said to the boy, "my defences is a-gittin' weak."

"Come up here, dodgast ye!" roared the General, "I want my daughter-in-law to know the bravest man that ever carried a gun! Ruth, this is Billy Heineman, that served a gun at Waterners Crossing five hours single-handed and risked his own life to bring his cap' in off the field!"

The Admiral nodded vigorously.

Uncle Billy disentangled the joyous boy from his wooden leg and ducked his head shamefacedly.

"'Twan' nothin'," he muttered "I jes' come round day t' ask if ye'd need anybody t' fix th' furnaces?"

The boy's mother looked at him with shining eyes.

"Why, of course," she said, "we'll need you. But you're just in time to settle a question. Do you think that my boy needs to be taught how to fight?"

General McGrew and Admiral Truefitt say that's the only way to make a man out of him.

The old man on the walk hesitated in evident perplexity.

"Well," he said slowly, "I reckon they know best. They is both great men, ma'am. I wasn't nothin' but a high private. But I never been quite sure in my own mind about fightin' since I come home from the War. Y'see, my mother got word I'd been killed and she . . . she sort o' . . . it sort o' . . . she was dead when I got home, furloughed . . . And I was sick fr' so long a spell that I couldn't help Dad . . . He was awful old an' weak . . . I hed t' watch him go, little by little, an' I couldn't help . . ."

"Of course, it's different with th' Admiral an' th' Gen'rul . . . but—"

He paused, embarrassed.

The General cleared his throat tremendously. The Admiral opened his mouth to speak and then shut it again.

"Ain't you goin' to give me a present, Uncle Billy?" begged the boy, tugging at the skirts of the faded overcoat.

"Why, of course, of course," ejaculated the third old man, reaching hastily into a ragged pocket.

"Tain't much, jes' a little lamb I cyarved outen a piece o' wood."

He produced it bashfully. The General lifted the boy up to see, and the three white heads bent over the sunny one and the gift.

"I want 'e drum!" said the boy emphatically.

But the General and the Admiral hesitated.

And the boy's mother smiled.

Spiritual Forces.

Patriot—"Dit you mean to say dot if dis coontry vud go to Var mit Jaben, you vudn't go?"

Friend—"Dot's choost vat I set.

Patriot—"Und you vud stay home und be called a goward?"

Friend—"I vud." (To the patriot's wife) "Und vud you let him go?"

Patriot—"Yes, she vud, coontry gomes vurst!"

The Wife—"Sure!—coontry vurst."
"Rise like Lions after slumber
In unvanquishable number---
Shake your chains to earth like dew
Which in sleep had fallen on you---
Ye are many----they are few."

From THE MASK OF ANARCHY.
by Shelley.
ADAM AND SUNDAY

Robert Carlton Brown

ADAM COOK believed in communism; that is why he lived alone—but only for a time.

Adam treated himself as an experiment. Like the child with the chicken, he figuratively pulled off his own feathers to see how they were stuck on. Adam’s first experiment, after he settled in Eden, was with his hair. He let his whiskers grow to a point where, when he peered out through the bushes at a passing stranger, it was impossible to distinguish anything but his peaked nose and pointed chin among the foliage.

Adam hadn’t always lived in Eden. He had been hired as stenographer in the New Orleans headquarters of the Suffragette Movement. But Adam, ever a radical, always susceptible to the ideal, was converted by a travelling Mormon missionary and dismissed by the indignant Suffragettes, all in one day.

Then he looked about for a job. There being nothing open, he took to the woods—a move he had long planned.

Down in Alabama he found the proper place, a rude homestead where the single Taxer and his mate should live the natural life. But he was soon disillusioned by the civilizing and Suffering that accompanied society at once, Adam walked to that place in Alabama. He did this mainly because walking is the “natural” mode of travel, but partly also because he had a capital of only forty cents. When Adam reached the hut, he took off his outer shirt and donned a pair of khaki trousers.

Two years later there was Adam, living alone in the same hut, eating his simple breakfast out of two huge bowls placed on an upturned stump. He ate and drank and paced back and forth philosophizing. He wore a different undershirt, but the same pair of trousers.

In those two years Adam mixed not with his fellow beings in the Single Tax community. Neither did he spin. Yet he was not wholly idle. He read Henry George, Upton Sinclair, John Stuart Mill, Epicurus, Myrtle Reed, Wagner and Schopenhauer. He acquainted himself with predigested philosophy and used plantain leaves for handkerchiefs. Through daily thought and daily reading he became an even more ardent radical than he was at birth. Everything radical appealed to him—anything radical. What the world despised and cast out Adam Cook clapped to his bosom and warmed back to life. He had still had hopes for trial marriage, lunched for a free distribution of property, and loved the Mafia and Camorra for their active anarchy.

Aside from reclaiming the old, Adam systematically adopted the new. He was a communist Socialist, Mormon, Athiestic New-Thoughtist, Sympathizer with the Vivisectists, Single Taxer, Firm Believer in Musical Therapeutics and Vegetarianism. What he didn’t believe in had no followers. In a word, Adam was even more receptive and radical than the Single Taxers themselves. He had a rabid opinion on every subject, and even a theory for solving the Servant Problem.

The reason he had not mingled with his Single Tax neighbors in those two years was that he dwelled on privately-owned land and wore neither shoe, shirt, nor chaps. The colony believed in a Single Tax, but opposed the single garment. So Adam kept entirely to himself, made his living in the ideal climate he had chosen for his Eden by working two hours in his garden each day, fishing and crabbing an hour every other day in the bay, and occasionally offering a lodging to a stray chicken or two. Thus, living up strictly to the tenets of active Socialism, he was happy.

One morning at Adam was strolling early along the beach that was his by right of usage, he came upon foot-prints in the sand. As first he tried to name some animal or bird to which they might belong. Then something stirred him. Could they be the foot-prints of a man-Friday, or a woman-Friday? He thought of the calendar—it was Sunday. He thought of Robinson Crusoe and his discovery. Could this be a human foot-print? He had never seen one at that hour of the morning since he had lived in Eden. Dropping to his knees, he inspected the impression. His verdict was that it was almost human. A deep square hole, like the impress of a teamster’s thumb, and two inches in front a rounded point, as though left by the toe of a little snail sleeper.

Why Adam should think that sleeper was snail is a mystery. But snail it was. Adam sat down beside the print, thrust his own feet into the lapping water and looked at them glistening there, bare, in the morning sun. Then he stood up, stroked his long, wild beard, and thoughtfully pressed his broad sole into the sand beside the fair, civilized print.

“Adam and Sunday,” he said meditatively, looking at them side by side and getting a thrill out of it. Then he scratched the two names in the sand with his great toe and bracketed them, a beam of satisfaction spreading evenly over his tanned face. Somewhat further on he spied another deep heel mark. Marveling how she could walk in the sand on those little stilts, he followed the track along the lapping water’s edge until some conflicting cuts on the smooth sidewalk of sand gave him sudden pause. He dropped to the trail and examined each mark with infinite care. Here was where she had sat down, actually rolled over, in the damp sand. Her elbow had left this impression. That stick with the damp sand clinging to the end of it she had poked at a spider crab. Here were the signs of a seam in her dress; the point of her parasol had left its mark, and there was a sand flower she had dropped.

Adam looked ahead and gave a mad leap. It is trite to say he couldn’t believe his eyes, but actually he couldn’t. There was a “natural” feminine foot-print—the bare foot itself—impressed on the sands of Eden. He had never seen one before, anywhere. Yet his eyes assured him that this was a female foot-print. Those square thumb-punched holes had disappeared, and in their place was the impression of part of a human heel, shaped like a small ig, and then came the toes, five of them, and so nicely graded. Adam gasped. Then he dropped right down and reverently passed his fingers over them one at a time, repeating with the tender tone he had often noted in his mother’s voice, “This little pig went to market, this little pig stayed at home, this little pig had roast bee,” and—

He was off, leaped to his feet, and ran ahead to a point where his eyes did dirty. There, sculptured on the sands, was evidence of a wild, joyous morning dance. He felt her grace and ease of motion in the regular, almost rhythmic foot-prints she had left. His senses, extraordinarily acute, caught and modelled the arch to her foot where she had danced, and he was in ecstasy over her toe twirling.

“A dance of devotion to the sun?” he cried. And then Adam essayed a little slip step of his own, being very careful not to destroy the original prints.

It is a crude, flat-footed dance a man does who has done nothing but the philosophic stride for two years, but Adam remembered a part of a clog, a part of a quadrille, with a bit of old-fashioned waltzing to fill in the gaps, and he did pretty well.

Just as he was whirling around in a sort of Spanish fandango, or oncelette, he heard a scream, and then another. The screams sounded as feminine as the footsteps looked; Adam instinctively turned and dashed toward the sound. It came from around a bend in the bay, so he cut direct through the thickets. As he burst through, the screams became more insistent and he suddenly came face to face with a five-foot woman standing on one leg and kicking the other frantically in an effort to loosen the hold of a bold blue crab, clumsily but effectively embracing the little toe that went to market.

Adam was about to rush forward and struggle the clinging crab, when his swinging arm came in contact with his chest and he remembered that he was shirtless. For one agonizing moment he stopped and tried to cover the upper half of himself with widespread hands. Then he ducked, turned, and fled for the bushes.

“Help! Help!” screamed the fair one.

Adam had gained the brush and was peering over a blackberry bush.

“But I—l—l—"

“Help! It’s a crab! On my foot!” screamed the girl.

Adam grasped a thorny branch in his agony, and tried to wrench it off to cover his near nakedness.

“Help! Help! Come! Please!” She was trailing the crab along in the sand and limping toward him.

“But I—my shirt—"

“Never mind your shirt; are you a man or a clothing store dummy?”

Thus challenged Adam burst from the bushes and ruthlessly twisted the crab from its claw. The talon dropped. Adam examined the bruise and found that the girl’s toe-nail had prevented any great damage, but there was a slight abrasion on the flesh at the side. He bent over it giddily, looking more at the shapeliness of the foot than at the wound, and drew gradually, instinctively toward his lips.

She struggled to maintain her balance, meanwhile, on the other leg. He looked up startled. Her eyes were reproachful. He put the foot quickly down.

“There’s your foot,” he said.

“Oh, thank you,” she replied.

Then she looked at his shirtlessness.

“Aren’t you afraid you’ll take cold?” she asked.

“Are you afraid of what people will say?” he replied, looking down at the injured toe she was thrusting deep into the cool sand.

“If they see me here with you?” she queried.

“Oh, I hadn’t thought of that—I was thinking of your bare feet,” Adam looked around him three times, as they say a wild dog does before settling in strange quarters. “I—you’ll pardon me, and promise to wait right here while I run back to town and buy a shirt?”

“It’s not necessary,” she said, thrusting a red silk parasol toward him. “Wear this.”

So he sat by her side, the umbrella between them and draped over his left shoulder.

“A thing like this wouldn’t happen twice in the same lifetime,” sighed Adam, looking back and toying tremendously with the silken tassel on the parasol.

(Concluded on page 12)
Splinter Beach

Drawn by George Bellows
ADAM AND SUNDAY

(Concluded from page 9)

She did not answer immediately, but after a pause she asked him in an awed tone, "Are you really an anarchist, and do you live on monkey food, and write poems, and—never, never trim your whiskers?"

"All of that and more, Madam," said Adam impressively.

"And your soul throbs, and you believe in a redistribution of property, the degradation of work, equal suffrage, and affluence?" she asked anxiously.

"I do," said Adam, and there was timbre in his tone.

"And so do I. I am a nature worshipper. I despise all artifice. I would live in a hut in the woods and eat raw food," she exclaimed vehemently.

"Ah, but words are nothing. A proof that you would," cried Adam, fixing on her his fiercest philosophic gaze.

"There!" She gave a little checked cry and threw one high-heeled shoe far out into the bay.

"You surrender to nature. It is enough. Don't!" Adam caught the second shoe before she hurled it into the surf and stuffed it into his pocket. "Come," he cried. "We are the true Nature lovers. I will build you that hut in the woods, and it shall be next to mine, and we shall meet in the mornings and worship the sun. We shall dance together on the sands. We shall be comrades, fellow fighters in the strife for the natural life. Come, don't care what the Single Taxers or the postmaster say. It shall be a platonically pact between us."

"True platonically friendship. It is all I have ever wanted and ever will," she cried feelingly, thrusting out her velvety little manicured hand.

Adam pressed it in his unpolished paw and lifted her to her twinkling feet. They began work that morning, and before night the house was finished.

Adam bought another shirt on credit, went to the Inn and personally conducted Sunday's suit-case and steamer-trunk to her little cabin on his back. He stood without and dumped them respectfully inside, not presuming to enter, for now it was her abode and certain rules and boundaries must be arranged and respected.

After that there was another question Besides Single Tax in the neighboring colony.

Somebody gathering lilies in the vicinity of Eden one morning spied Adam and Sunday eating porridge together on a log in the common clearing between their two huts. Another saw them walking together through the pines by moonlight, and a third swore he had passed by Eden that same night and seen Adam escort his soul-mate to her cabin door, bow and say, "Good-night, Madam," as grandly and reservedly as a waiter at Delmonico's.

Some maids, who were advanced in thought and age, said they quite approved of the relation, were certain it was wholly proper, and could never understand, anyway, why so much stress was laid on sex. A few scholars agreed. A newspaper heard of the story and sent out an enterprising young man to interview Adam and Sunday.

He found them sitting demurely each on his own side of the common log, engaging views on anarchy and certain subtle shadings of the soul. The reporter, confused and amused, made a rather good feature story on the strange young couple who treated each other as brother thinkers. That brought people to Eden. Adam dodged about in the bush for the first few days and managed to evade them. There could have been no reason for this but modesty or bashfulness, for out of respect to his comrade Sunday he had never removed the shirt he donned on the day of her coming.

Longer than a few days, however, Adam could not escape them. He turned teacher and talked. People listened, and some came to live with him, for he it was who had found Nature, had solved the complexities of life, and knew a true, trusted comradeship as the only tie which should exist between thinking man and woman.

Adam was invited to lecture and write articles for the Sunday magazines. As first he was reluctant, despising the money and notoriety offered him. But his little flock and Sunday insisted that while, as he said, money was a snare and a delusion, it was his duty to go out and teach this very fact to the erring world, even though money should be the inevitable result. He must lay bare the inner relations of the ideal community, teach and proselyte.

So Adam did. Civilisation spoiled not him. He appeared on the platform bare of foot and wild of whisker, speaking only anarchy, utter annihilation of the present social system, and telling of the ideal progress of man and woman in Eden, on the basis of Comradeship.

Many heard and some believed. In a year's time Sunday herself called to go on the road with him, to teach. They maintained the same strict comradeship; and it was a pretty thing to see Adam, bare-foot, lead Sunday, in sandals, each night to the door of her room in the principal hotel of the town in which they happened to be teaching.

Adam took in thousands of dollars in checks, but he was a child as to money. He just put the checks into handy banks and forgot all about them. Five cents for peanuts and a dime for fruit sufficed him for a day's spending money. Neither tea, coffee, tobacco, nor rum tempted him. He was as abstemious as a saint.

He and Sunday walked instead of taking the railroad, despising all evidences of civilization except hotels, mindful only of their duty to teach the world to come back and live altogether, as it were, en masse with Nature.

After six months of strenuous lecturing and writing Adam and Sunday returned tired to Eden, and took to their respective bungalows in the woods. People flocked to live and linger in the vicinity. With Adam and Sunday as Big Brother and Sister the community was conducted with great spiritual success.

Adam wrote books and magazine articles, Sunday helping him, on the common log between their huts. The idea took like wild-fire. The affinity theory became neglected, and all who held radical ideas on love and life joined the happy little colony, until Adam was forced to build a hotel and start a magazine.

He would have taken to making furniture, rag rugs, and bay-berry candles if it were not for the fact that he and Sunday got tired of counting money and piling it in stacks to be deposited in the bank.

One morning as all the inhabitants of Eden came to the common log for their daily Breakfast Break-silence from Adam and their morning marver over what a natural, unfeebly life they were leading, they received a shock in finding both their leaders absent. Gone, but not forgotten.

At noon-time the faithful followers became impatient and pounced on Adam's door. No answer came. They stepped reverently to Sunday's hut and attacked it. The portal swung open at their first knock and the single room within proved empty. There were signs of a hurried gathering-up.

The true-believers rushed back to Adam's little root-tree and pounced in the panels. That too was deserted.

Had Big Brother and Sister turned traitors, deserted their faith—the faith they had founded—and deserted? All Eden held its breath.

The searchers went farther. One, stumbling over a low, crude couch, caught at the wall for support, and the wall gave way behind a hanging, showing a trap door. This covered a downward passage, through which the discoverers feverishly tumbled.

They passed through a comfortable cave-room deep in the ground between the huts of the Big Brother and Sister and directly beneath the common log. Following the passage they gasped to see it lead up, through a cleverly concealed rug, into Sunday's own sanctified cottage. Returning to the cave room below, by the aid of candles set in the wall they examined the comfortable chamber, fully furnished. Peeping from beneath a lounge piled with pine boughs was a pair of cozy, furry, red-lined bed-slippers, beautifully vain and feminine, and over the back of a rustic bench was a man's hat-robe. The truth-believers probed further, faulting for facts. They found jars of coffee, tea, tobacco, and whiskey.

Their comments were muttered in a low tone at first, but soon they denounced with righteous wrath the discoverers who had put behind them (or below them) all worldly things.

Finally some one saw a bit of white paper fluttering below a frame hanging on the mud wall.

"Dear misguided folks," it read, "we have known the joys of domestic bliss together in this room these three years, but we are both tired of counting money. Sunday's health has suffered from constantly adding up profits, and this room gets very damp and chilly during the Spring rains. We can't face out another season of discomfort in our cave. We have sailed for Paris. Be good cheer and go back to the old, simple faith of your fathers. New ideas are all right from a commercial standpoint, especially for the organizers, but they're hard to carry on consistently. Go back to the laws and ways of your fathers; they had things doped out right. Sunday and I realized that from the very first, as you will see by the evidence in the frame below."

"ADAM AND SUNDAY."

"Tis of Thee.

There was a wench in our town,
She was a poor wage slave;
Her son, her only pride and joy,
He was a soldier brave.

One day the mother went on strike—
What did the brave boy do?
He took his Governmental Gun
And shot his Ma in two.

And when he saw his Ma was dead,
That toiling Ma of his'n,
He heaved a sigh, and shed a tear,
And said, "Well—'tis Patriotism."

—Mary Field.
"Please, a Flower—for the Baby"
Impossible

S	ARTLED he looked about him. "My legs are comfortable," he muttered. "My knees aren't cramped. I can get the kicks out of my calves and even lean back a little. My line of sight is unobstructed. Why, not only can I see everything, I can also hear everything. I can retire to the foyer without disturbing fifteen people, or even one, but—I'm so comfortable sitting here that I'd rather stay just where I am. These lights—the music—the scenery—all look real, yes, they strongly suggest reality—but it's impossible. Whoever heard of a comfortable theater? I must be dreaming."

And doggone it, that's just what he was doing.

H. W.

Superior Inferiority

WHAT is a superior and what is an inferior race?

This question has been agitating the minds of newspaper editors since the passage of the anti-Japanese bill in California, and it is evident that whatever happens to the Japanese, ethnology will be the gainer. Nothing seems more likely to revolutionize that science than the luminous and convincing statement by one of our editors that a race is inferior when you look at it, and that it is superior when it looks at you. In other words, the Japanese are both an inferior and a superior race. It is all a matter of looks. You see?

THOMAS SELLER.

The Double-Twisted Crab

T	HE double-twisted crab looked up at the golden bars of Heaven—

His watery eyes knew more of grief
Than Devil's-Hades driven
He held a shovel in his hand
And the humps on his back were seven.

His clothes unwashed for many moons,
Strange odors did emit;
The shoes that hung upon his feet
Were never meant to fit.

His glances fell two ways at once—
Being cross-eyed, opposite.

He seemed to scarce had seen a day
That held out pleasant hours;
Year after year he'd stumbled on
Beneath task-grinding powers—
So blindly driven he longed to go
And rest beneath the flowers.

"I wish that I could enter there,"
He croaked in accents hoarse,
"But Fate has no such store for me—
My outfit is too coarse."

And then the double-twisted crab
Shed tears—the poor old horse.

DANTE GABRILOWSKI SCRATCHOWSKI.

A Dissertation on Virtue

Horatio Winslow

M	Y son John went down to New York and the first thing he done was to find twelve dollars in bills. He looked round and saw it was lost by a laborin' man nearby, and when he give it back the laborin' man was so delighted he stood John up to a bar and bought colored drinks for him till John thought he'd bust.

Fact, John got feeling so good he didn't know where he was goin' till he found hisself on Wall Street, and there most at his feet was a big yellow pocketbook with thousands of dollars' wuth of bills and papers.

"Well," John says to himself, "seems like good fortune was pursuining me to-day. If I turn this in I ought to get enough to buy a farm." And so sayin' he took it around to the man whose name was on the papers.

And that old feller just looked at John and counted the bills over twice, and looked at John again, and turned the boy over to the police as a suspicious character.

Is Virtue its own reward?

I dunno.

Some says the h—som says it hain't.

Some says it hain't when it has and some says it has when it hain't.

But it looks like you can't lay down no rules.
Boosting the Outcast

"But do you think these so-called Settlements really do any good to the people who live down there?"

"Well, I should just say they do! When Miss Climber was openly trying to break into society she was a Parish, but since she took that Girls' Club at St. Cuthbert's she's been asked to eight exclusive teas, twelve ditto receptions, two balls, and has almost had a proposal from a millionaire."

H. W.

Mother Gooselet

Little Tommy Tucker works for his supper,
His breakfast and his dinner,
And his clothes and shoes and such.
Little Tommy's wage is Small because his age is.
A little eight year older
Ain't entitled to earn much.

M. F.

Ins and Outs

Have you ever noticed how, in the subway every morning, those inside a crowded train will indignantly exclaim in varied dialects: "There ain't no room here?" "Aw, quit yer pushin'?" "My good fellow, you can't get in; there isn't an inch of space to spare."

Of course the Ins have forgotten that they won their places by the very means against which they now protest. When they were among the Outs they were the loudest to proclaim that there was plenty of room inside, if those guys would only get in out of the door!

But, you object, after all there isn't room enough in the car for everyone. Well, if this is true, in time the damned thing must burst.

James Henle

Sabotage

From a sign in a barber-shop window on Cape Cod:

"Honey in the comb."

Exercise for Women

According to Dr. Sargent of Harvard the cure for feminine unrest is exercise. The girl who earns only $6 a week and falls into temptation, says Dr. Sargent, does not go wrong because of her meager wage, but because of insufficient exercise. Apparently there is nothing like a good long day's work in a laundry or silk mill to stimulate a craving for dumbbells in the evening.

Howard Burbaker

Adv.

The Sixth Avenue firm of Simpson and Crawford sold most of the parade hats that were worn in the suffrage demonstration of May 3. It is not known how many hats were worn, but this firm sold the entire output of the manufacturer, and after that many higher priced hats of similar shape. Christine Urbanek, a saleswoman, from selling some hundreds of parade hats, conceived a burning desire to march. She thought she could, because Simpson and Crawford had assured the Women's Political Union that they would allow their employees to do so if they desired, and were willing to lose half a day's pay. Christine thought more of the parade than she did of her scant wage, so she marched and was happy. On Monday morning when she reached her department she was told to go to the superintendent's office. There the following dialogue took place.

"Did you leave the store last Saturday to march in that suffrage parade?"

"I did."

"Call for your time. You're fired."

So now Christine is jobless as well as voteless.

You will not be able to buy your next year's parade hat at Simpson and Crawford's, but in the meantime you ought to patronize them whenever you want anything in the department store line.

Riheta Childe Dorr

"My dear—so you know this whole suffrage movement is nothing but a sex appeal."
What the Milliondollar Baby Wanted
Horatio Winslow

H E didn’t want his gold inlaid bottle and he didn’t want his gold-centered rubber ring and he wouldn’t lie still like a good boy and listen to his golden rattle.

Poor Mrs. Milliondollar was clean distracted. She went to her private bank account and drew out a thousand dollars in gold to hire the celebrated French clown to come and make faces for the baby. After that she drew out two thousand more in gold to hire Madame Gaufetti to sing little redcaps to sleep.

But the baby only wept at the faces and when Madame Gaufetti began her lullaby he yodeled until Madame flew into an artistic convulsion fit.

And then the doctor was called.

He looked the Milliondollar baby over from head to foot.

“Come, Mrs. Milliondollar,” he said, lifting his voice a little, “let us get down to facts.”

“Facts?” she seemed agitated under her composure.

“Facts—brass tacks—groundstones—anything you want to call them. In the first place you know quite as well as I what the baby wants and you know that have it must.”

“Doctor?”

“Don’t pretend to be shocked: that child wants just one thing and that is his mother.”

Mrs. Milliondollar smoothed her dress nervously.

“But, Doctor, when I adopted him I made it plain to his mother that the baby was leaving her forever.”

“Do you want to lose the child? (Mrs. Milliondollar began to whisper.) Then tell me where the mother lives.”

“In—it’s way out—I—I don’t know.”

The doctor was looking her squarely in the eye. For a moment she returned the look defiantly. Then her eyes wavered.

“Don’t you think,” he said, “that you should tell me everything?” She opened her mouth to speak, but no words came. “Don’t try to conceal it from me any longer. I have inspected it from the very first.”

Mrs. Milliondollar had arisen and stood facing the doctor with an outward defiance, though the silk of the sleeve betrayed the trembling arm it covered.

“I have stopped suspecting now—I know. I came across it all by accident Sunday when I was motoring in the country. The man who keeps the private sanitarium is an old classmate of mine. You came there under an assumed name. And the child you went away with was not a stray foundling adopted: it was your own.”

The woman’s knees gave way. Crouched on the floor she buried her head in her hands, moaning. For a good minute he stood looking at her, then he crossed the room to lay a comforting hand on her shoulder.

“Yes, the child is your own. But you need not feel so downtrodden. You may have sinned against the conventions, but what is disgraceful now may not be disgraceful twenty-five years from now. When the child grows up perhaps times will be so changed that you can tell him without shame that he is not adopted, but your very own.”

Her face was flushed; her eyes, wet with tears, but eager. He bent over to take her cold, white hand between two of his.

“Do not be ashamed, my child. It may be vulgar to have children, but there is nothing wrong about it. It may mean a fall in the social scale, but perhaps some day the little pink hands will seem as appealing as the quivering chops of a prize poodle.

“Tell your husband everything. He may be shocked and disappointed at first to learn that after five years of successful married life he has become a father, but time will gloss this over. In fact, I think that within six months he will be reconciled to the fact that the baby is not adopted, but is yours—and his.”

Two minutes later the strained expression on Mrs. Milliondollar’s massacred but worry-worn face had dropped to a relaxed content. She had opened her dress and, groping with instinctive fingers, the little Milliondollar baby was nuzzling her like a purring kitten.

Friend in Need

“I AM glad,” said the philanthropist, “that you are instructing the people of your factory in the secrets of a nutritious but economical diet.”

“Biggest thing going,” said Mr. Fatchip enthusiastically. “Just let me get ’em feeling their oats on fifteen cents a day and then watch what happens to the payroll.”

H. W.

Press Pearls

THE flaunting by the rich of their extravagances is arousing the bitter envy of the poor.

“Sociologists are adding to the discontent by telling the world that poverty can be abolished, that it is not a result of original sin, that original sin is a myth, that there is no sin, no moral evil—only physical evils that await physical cures. They eliminate from the problem the only equation that can make a poor man content with his lot, and that is the existence of a hereafter.”

—Bishop Cusack before the Catholic College.

“M R. ROBERT FROTHEMING.
Everybody’s Magazine, New York.

DEAR MR. FROTHINGHAM:

“The usual habit of human nature is to find fault when things are going badly. I feel we should turn this rule around and give praise when things are going well.”

Therefore, in the midst of a successful appeal by our advertising, let us stop for a moment to thank you for offering us a means of speaking directly to such a high type of American citizenship, for these are the people in America we wish to reach.

“Sincerely yours.”

“COL. MOTOR CAR COMPANY,”

“J. J. Cox, President.”

“The closing paragraphs of this entirely voluntary letter strike deep-sea soundings.”

—Everybody’s Magazine.

“M ORGAN’S WILL A HUMAN DOCUMENT.
Gives Insight into the Character of the Man.
Son to Receive Bulk of the Estate.”

—N. Y. Tribune.

A Little Correction
James Henle

THIS isn’t much—just a tale of old Rome that the historians have got wrong.

It was in the days of the great Republic. The city was what is technically known as flourishing; the patricians were wise enough to keep an ample share of the good things for themselves, and strong enough to put down with an iron hand the murmuring plebeians. So the city prospered.

Yet in spite of all this flourishing—of trade and of weapons against the plebeians and of what-not—a terrible thing occurred. At nightfall all had been well, but when morning came a great abyss had opened in the Forum. The augurs were consulted. The abyss would never close until of his own accord the Worst Man in Rome threw himself into it.

The populace was panic-stricken. Of his own accord? But if he were the worst man, he would certainly never throw himself in of his own accord. Besides, who was the worst man? There were too many who might claim the honor, because when a city flourishes other things flourish also.

Yet in the minds of most this question was answered when Marcus Curtius walked toward the Forum. There might be meaner men than he, but surely none was worse—that is to say, none was more disreputable. Beyond all doubt he was the worst man in Rome. He had comported with thieves and had supped with publicans and sinners, and even more evil things were whispered about him. Respectable Roman mammas made their daughters turn away their faces as he passed. For Marcus Curtius had abandoned his class, and his class had proceeded to throw him out after he was gone. So Marcus Curtius had proceeded on his sad way, keeping bad hours and worse companions, getting gaily drunk and spitefully sober, preaching the most violent and shocking of doctrines when he was in liquor—and at times when he was not—and in general earning his right to be styled the worst, the worst disreputable man in Rome.

That was why the crowd gave way at his approach that bleak morning in the Forum. But Marcus Curtius scarcely noticed the crowd. He walked to the edge of the abyss and peered into the depths. He seemed to have no doubt as to what he was going to do. Wrapping his toga about him, and murmuring something about “All the damned rot”—or it may have been the “Dammed rotten State”—he stepped calmly into the chasm and the abyss closed above him.

Of course, the rest of the story is only too well known to you. His image was placed with those of his ancestors in the family mansion in which, years ago, he had been forbidden to set foot, and a statue was erected to him in the Forum where he had once been stoned. And so the Respectables, thus honoring him, persuaded themselves that he too had been respectable, that he was the best instead of the worst man in Rome. And that is how the historians happened to make their mistake.

Vice Versa

T HE sex revolution must be about over. I was met the other day at the door of a cabaret, where society indulges in dancing sea-parties, with “I’m sorry, sir, but gentlemen are not allowed at this restaurant unless accompanied by a lady!”

T. O’S.
Anti-Political Actionists Take Notice

When kicked out of Capitalist Paterson, N. J., a Socialist Halzon, N. J.,

HAS PROVED NOT ONLY CONVENIENT BUT NECESSARY.

Another Case of Ingratitude

John Reed

Walking late down Fifth Avenue, I saw him ahead of me, on the dim stretch of sidewalk between two arc lights. It was biting cold. Head sunk between hunched-up shoulders, hands in his pockets, he shuffled along, never lifting his feet from the ground. Even as I watched him, he turned, as if in a daze, and leaned against the wall of a building, where it made an angle out of the wind. At first I thought it was shelter he sought, but as I drew nearer I discerned the unnatural stiffness of his legs, the way his cheek leaned against the cold stone, and the glimmer of light that played on his sunken, closed eyes. The man was asleep! Asleep—the bitter wind searching his flimsy clothes and the holes in his shapeless shoes; upright against the hard wall, with his legs stiff as those of an epileptic. There was something bestial in such gluttony of sleep.

I went to him and shook him by the shoulder. He slowly opened an eye, cringing as though he were often disturbed by rougher hands than mine, and gazed at me with a hardly a trace of intelligence.

"What's the matter—sick?" I asked.

Faintly he mumbled something, and at the same time stepped out as if to move away. I asked him what he had said, bending close to hear.

"No sleep for two nights," came the thick voice.

"Nothing to eat for three days." He stood there obediently under the touch of my hand, swaying a little, staring vacantly at me with eyes that hung listlessly between opening and shutting.

"Well, come on," I said, "we'll go get something to eat and then I'll fix you up with a bed." Docilely he followed me, stumbling along like a man in a dream, falling forward and then balancing himself with a step. From time to time his thick lips gave utterance to husky, irrelevant words and phrases. "Got to sleep walking around," he said again and again, and "They kept moving me on."

I took his arm and guided him into the white door of an all-night lunch-room. I sat him at a table, where he dropped into a dead sleep. I set before him roast beef and mashed potatoes, and two ham sandwiches, and a cup of coffee, and bread and butter, and a big piece of pie. And then I woke him up. He looked up at me with a dawning meaning in his expression. The look of humble gratitude, love, devotion was almost canine in its intensity. I felt a warm thrill of Christian brotherhood all through my veins. I sat back and watched him eat.

At first he went at it awkwardly, as if he had lost the habit. Mechanically he employed little tricks of table manners—perhaps his mother had taught them to him. He fumblingly changed knife and fork from right hand to left, and then put down his knife and took a dainty piece of bread in his left hand; removed the spoon from his coffee cup before he drank, and spread butter thinly and painstakingly on his bread. His motions were so somnambulistic that I had a strange feeling of looking on a previous incarnation of the man. These little niceties, so instinctive to him, and yet so uncustomed—what did they mean? It flashed through me that they must belong to his youth.

As the dinner progressed, a marvelous change took place. The warmth and nourishment, heating and feeding his thin blood, flooded the nerve centers of that starving body; a quick flush mounted to his cheeks, every part of him started widely awake, his eyes flashed. The little niceties of manner dropped away as if they had never been. He slipped his bread roughly in the gravy, and thrust great knife-loads of food into his mouth. The coffee vanished in great gulps. He became an individual instead of a descendant; where there had been a beast, a spirit lived; he was a man!

The metamorphosis was so exciting, so gratifying, that I could hardly wait to learn more about him. I held in, however, until he should have finished his dinner.

As the last of the pie disappeared, I drew forth a box of cigarettes and placed them before him. He took one, nodded and accepted one of my matches.

"Thanks," he said.

"How much will it cost you for a bed—a quarter?" I asked.

"Yeh," he said. "Thanks."

He sat looking rather nervously at the table, inhaling great clouds of smoke. It was my opportunity.

"What's the matter—no work?"

He looked me in the eye, for the first time since dinner had begun, in a surprised manner. "Sure," he said briefly. I noticed, with somewhat of a shock, that his eyes were gray, whereas I had thought them brown.

"What's your job?"

He didn't answer for a moment. "Bricklayer," he grunted. What was the matter with the man?

"Where do you come from?"

"Been here long?"

"Say," said my guest, leaning over. "Wot do you t'ink I am, a phonygraf?"

For a moment I was speechless with surprise. "Why, I was only asking to make conversation," I said feebly.

"Now you won't. You thought that just because you give me a hand-out, I'd do a sub-story all over you. Wot right have you got to ask me all them questions? I know you fellers. Just because you got money you t'ink you can buy me with a meal..."

"Nonsense," I cried, "I do this perfectly unselfishly. What do you think I get out of feeding you?"

He lit another of my cigarettes. "You get all you want," he smiled. "Come on now, don't it make you feel good all over to save a poor starvin' bum's life? God! You're pure and holy for a week!"

"Well, you're a strange specimen," said I angrily. "I don't believe you've got a bit of gratitude in you!"

"Gratitude Hell!" said he easily. "Wot for? I'm thankin' my luck—out you—see? It might as well 'a been me as any other bum. Don't if you hadn't struck me, you'd 'a hunted up another down-and-out. You see," he leaned across the table, explaining: "You just had to save somebody to-night. I understand. I got a appetite like that too. Only mine's women."

Whereupon I left that ungrateful bricklayer and went to wake up Drusilla, who alone understands me.
The Underwood Typeewriter

HAS NO RIVALS IN

Speed and Accuracy

It holds all world's records in open competition.

"THE MACHINE YOU WILL EVENTUALLY BUY"

Underwood Typewriter Co., Inc.
UNDERWOOD BUILDING, NEW YORK
Branches in all Principal Cities.

BOOKS BY

Charlotte Perkins Gilman
Editor of "The Forerunner"

"Mrs. Gilman has won a reputation in Europe as well as in America as a woman of brilliant mind. As a thinker along ethical, economic and progressi-tive lines she is one of the representative women of the world."—The Daily News, Denver, Colo.

Women and Economics $1.50 net

"Since John Stuart Mill's essay there has been no book dealing with the whole position of women to approach it in originality of conception and brilliance of exposition."—London Chronicle.

In This Our World $1.25 net

"The poet of women and for women, a new and prophetic voice in the world. Montaigne would have rejoiced in her."—Mexican Herald.

The Man-made World $1.00 net

Here a woman of broad Humanitarianism and world-wide reputation shows the effect on Human life of too much masculine dominance.

The Crux $1.00 net

A story, out of which suddenly blazes the new morality, saying "Beware of a Biological Sin: for that there is no forgiveness."

Moving the Mountain $1.00 net

A thirty-year-old Utopia, with broadly active womanhood and strangely contented men.

Concerning Children $1.25 net

"WANTED—A philanthropist to give a copy to every English-speaking parent."—The Times, New York.

The Yellow Wallpaper (Story) 50c. net

"Worthy of a place beside some of the weird masterpieces of Hawthorne and Poe."—Literature.

What Diantha Did $1.10 net

What she did was to solve the domestic service problem for both mistress and maid in a southern California town.

The Home $1.00 net

The flight of modern criticism here falls upon a very ancient idol, changing our blind worship to wholesome doubled as an economic

Suffrage Songs Ten cents net

Appeals to the head, the heart, and to believers—or unbelievers—in equal rights for women.

CHARLTON CO., 67 Wall Street, New York City
Mention THE MASSES.

THE FORERUNNER

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE

Written, Edited, Owned and Published

By

CHARLOTTE PERKINS GILMAN

"Mrs. Gilman is a forceful and stimulating writer, with plenty of convictions and no lack of courage for them. No one is likely to fail of getting a full dollar's worth, who sends that amount for a year's subscription to THE FORERUNNER."—The Dial.

The Forerunner carries Mrs. Gilman's best and newest work; her social philosophy, her verse, satire, fiction, ethical teaching, humor, and criticism. It stands for

Humanism in Woman, and in Men, for

New Thought and New Life in Home that is no Workshop, for the New

Ethics, the New Economics, the New World

we are to make—are making.

Special Subscription Offer. Find enclosed 50c. for which enter my subscription to the Forerunner for four months.

Name

Address

$1.00 a year.

THE CHARLTON CO., 67 Wall St., New York
10c. a copy.

SUBSCRIBERS

Watch Your Number

This is the 26th issue of THE MASSES.

The number printed beside your address on the wrapper is the issue with which your Subscription expires. Don't fail to renew or you may miss one number, and we can't guarantee to fill orders for back issues.

We aim to make each issue a document of humanity which will be valued as much next year as to-day. We have no desire to make waste basket magazine.

Send your Subscription, $1.00 a year, to our NEW ADDRESS.

The MASSES PUBLISHING COMPANY
91 GREENWICH AVENUE, NEW YORK.
FREE!
A HIGH GRADE
"THERMATOR"
BOTTLE
WILL BE MAILED FREE TO ANY ADDRESS
IN THE UNITED STATES WITH EVERY YEARLY SUBSCRIPTION TO
THE MASSES

FOR A LIMITED TIME ONLY
This Offer Holds Good Until July 31st
The "Thermator" will be given with New Subscriptions
ONLY UPON REQUEST

The retail price for this bottle is $1.50
The Masses for a year . . . 1.00
Total Value . . . . $2.50
All for . . $1.12

Send 12 cents in stamps to cover postage and packing on the Bottle and One Dollar for a year's Subscription to THE MASSES. If you wish, the Bottle will be sent to one address and THE MASSES to another.

MAX SHEROVER, Circulation Agent
THE MASSES, 91 Greenwich Ave., NEW YORK

The Featherweight "THERMATOR"

This bottle is 11 inches high and is far superior to similar products already on the market. It is guaranteed by the manufacturer to keep liquids hot from 10 to 12 hours, keeps liquids ice cold for 12 to 15 hours. The bottle is very light and is covered with a non-heat-conducting material. Also provided with an aluminum drinking cup which fits over the bottle.

THE INTERNATIONAL

“A Review of Two Worlds”
A LIBERAL MAGAZINE of LITERATURE, International POLITICS, Philosophy and Drama
EDITED BY GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK
Associate Editors: BLANCHE SHOEMAKER, WAGSTAFF and RICHARD LE GALLUENNE
Contributing Editors: HUN, HERMAN A. METZ, GEORGE HOWE, PAUL V. WUNN, LEONARD D. ABBOT, B. RUSSEL HERTS, ROBERT ALLEPORT PARKER
Published Monthly Single Copies, 15 Cents $1.50 a Year

Moods Publishing Company
134 West 29th Street, NEW YORK CITY

The INTERNATIONAL is not an organ of propaganda, but a popular forum wherein every point of view worthy of intellectual consideration finds expression. The opinions of our contributors are their own not ours. This magazine believes in freedom of speech—even for its editors.

SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFER
The INTERNATIONAL for Three Months for 25 Cents.

Name
Address

Start a Business of Your Own
IN YOUR SPARE TIME
Mail order or local. Our Magazine shows you. Small investment, big value to you. 10c copy. 3 months 25c. Prospectus free.
The "LEVER" MAIL TRADER
441M, Elizabeth, N. J.
ANY CITY
Louis Untermeyer

Into the staring street
She goes on her nightly round,
With weary and tireless feet
Over the wretched ground.

A thing that man never spurns,
A thing that all men despise;
Into her soul there burns
The street with its pitiless eyes.

She needs no charm or wile;
She carries no beauty or power,
But a tawdry and casual smile
For a tawdry and casual hour.

The street with its pitiless eyes
Follows wherever she lurks,
But she is hardened and wise—
She rattles her bracelets, and smirks.

She goes with her sordid array,
Luring, without a lure;
She is man's hunger and prey—
His lust and its hideous cure.

All that she knows are the lies,
The evil, the squalor, the scars;
The street with its pitiless eyes,
The night with its pitiless stars.