Mr. Huebsch’s list includes books by

Hauptmann
Sideman
Rodin
Wells

Ellen Key
Steinbeck
Kear Hardie
Worwiccky
Gorky

Bergson
Brenneisen
Scott Nearing
John Sparco
A. L. Benson

and other popular foreign and American authors.

Here are three suggestions for Masses readers:

THE DEATH OF A NOBODY
by Jules Romains
Translated from the French by Desmond MacCarthy and Sydney Waterlow.
Cloth, $1.25, net.

The life of one in other’s minds—the “social consciousness” about which the sociologists have developed abstruse theories, is portrayed explicitly, with a little humor, in The “Nobody.” It dies in the second chapter. It is not only a masterpiece of literary art, but might well be used as the concrete text of the mind of the crowd.

ATTA TROLL
by Heinrich Heine
Translated by Herman Scheffauer; Introduction by Oscar Levy; Illustrations by Wally Pogany.
Board sides; parchment back, $1.25, net.

Brunetti wrote of Atta Troll: “Lyric poetry in its most personal and subjective form, and satire in its most mordant and ironical phase have never been more closely united, nor more indissolubly and indestructibly welded into an harmonious whole than in this work. Like Gulliver’s Travels, it is unique of its class.” This satire of which a dancing-bear is the hero, applies to political conditions of all times and countries and attests the universal mind of its creator.

THE OTHER KIND OF GIRL

Anonymous

Cloth, $1.00, net.

A street girl tells her story, not the “shocker” of betrayal, nor a “white slave” story of terror; but a harrowing veracious account of a life thousands voluntarily adopt because of the normal instinct was perverted through the neglect of their parents. By implication the “other kind of girl” criticizes the moral standard of rural communities and many of our respected institutions such as hospitals, charity organizations, department stores, reformatories, jails, and—churches.

B. W. HUEBSCH, Publisher, 225 Fifth avenue, New York

The Most POWERFUL Book Of Short Stories by any living American Writer is

LYON’S

GRAPHICS

These fifteen tales by Harris Merton Lyon are done by a man of rare genius—a man whose work you simply must know if you are interested in short-story masterpieces. No consideration of present day American literature is complete without an inclusion of Lyon’s masterful studies of our life. GRAPHICS ranks shoulder to shoulder with the shorter work of Hapgood, Sutcliff, Baring, Wedekind, and Tchekov, de Maupassant. The unforgettable 2000th Christmas is known to Socialists the world over.

Here are tales of social significance, caustic arrangements of social injustices—yet not mere propaganda, but memorable literature, powerful in its irony, inspiring in its horrors of melodious beauty. GRAPHICS isn’t just another book of short stories that you’ll read and throw away. It’s a book you’ll keep by you to re-read, quote and argue about. Thank you, Mr. Lyon, for having written a book that will be a classic and will be read in years to come.

Published by William Marion Reedy, St. Louis, Mo.

TWO NEW LOWRY BOOKS

“HERSELF”

By Dr. E. B. Lowry. It is regarded as the best book on sex hygiene for men. It tells plainly all the facts about sex and leads to health, happiness and success. Send $1.00.

“HIMSELF”

By Dr. E. B. Lowry. A comedy-humaine. The book has been translated into French and German.

Offered by Forbes & Co., through

THE MASSES BOOK STORE

142 W. 23rd St., New York

SPOON RIVER ANTHOLOGY

By Edgar Lee Masters

“A COMEDIE HUMAINE”

The bit of the season.

Send to

MASSES BOOK STORE

142 W. 23rd Street, New York
EIGHT LATE "HITS"

1—Spoon River Anthology, by Edgar Lee Masters. See advertisement on page 2. Send $1.25.

2—The Breaking Point, by Arctausheal. Radical original. Originally written in Russian and now published in English.原理的原始。由亚历山大·普列汉诺夫所写，并且被翻译成英文。Send $1.50.

3—The Tarrytown of Jacob Stahl, by J. D. Beresford. In three volumes: The Early History of Jacob Stahl; A Candidate for Truth; The Invisible Event. Floyd Dell places this trilogy among the best novels of the year. Perhaps the finest work of contemporary English fiction. Each $1.50. The set, $2.75.

6—The Harbor. Ernest Poole's delightful and quaint story of idealistic men and women in contact with the cruelly materialistic life of New York harbor. Send $1.50.

7—The Cry for Justice, an anthology of the literature of social protest, through all the ages. Edited by Lyon Soule. 655 pages. Splendidly bound. Illustrated. Send $2.

8—Moonbeams from the Larger Lunacy, by Stephen Leacock, author of "Nonsense Novels," "Literary Lapses," etc. A new budget of fun by a great and contagious American humorist. Send $1.35.

FICTION

Me: A Book of Remembrance. Anonymous. Perhaps the most impressive novel of the year. Send $0.50.

Cranquibille, by Anatole France. Translated by Winifred Stephens. Send $1.85. The story of a coterie merchant who is turned from a dull-witted and inoffensive creature by the knowledge of the police and rigorous law into a desperado.

To All Masses Readers. You are urged to buy books through "The Masses Book Store," which is the same given this page. Here is an interesting assortment, many books being new. The Masses has made arrangements with the publishers to offer these books to you. You pay no money—often less for books purchased through us than from dealers and your patronage will assist us in the great problem of publishing The Masses without loss. No one is trying to make money out of The Masses, but we do want its receipts to pay the cost of publishing. If you want any book, whether listed here or not, ask us for it. Address "The Masses," 142 W. 23rd St., New York. Send check, money order or postage. Notice: When the price is given add 10 per cent to the published price, to cover cost of mailing. If west of the Mississippi add 10 per cent.

The Genius, by Theodore Dreiser. A novel of modern life and modern social problems, not to be briefly discussed now and here. $1.60, postpaid.

The Freeland, by John Galsworthy. Send $1.45. A romance of love, and love, and love, and love, interwoven with and to some extent depending upon social and political problems.

Pals First—Francis Perry Elliott. "It is not often nowadays that a writer can completely fool his reader as to the outcome of his story, but that palm at least belongs to Francis P. Elliott."—Pioneer Press (St. Paul). $1.30 net. Harper & Brothers.

Sets of Poe, Scott, Hugo, Dumas, Lincoln, Kipling, Dickens, Stevenson, Shakespeare: 6 vols each set. $1.60 the set. delivere.

God's Quarrel, by George Bronson-Howard. One of the few works of fiction that deserves to be called a novel, and of the fortunate gift which when we speak of Dickens, for instance, as a scene, New York and Long Island; time, present day; purpose, to show through the lives of three young men the social injustice of modern civilization. Purable, absorbing, original in both substance and style. Thirty-five speaking characters live in its four hundred and seventy-five pages and appeal to our every emotion. Price, $1.40 net. Bobbs-Merrill Company.

Wood and Stone, by John Cowper Powys. $1.50 net.

The Invisible Night, by Robert Bow Mann. Send $1.25, postpaid. A graphic picture of Russian life.

The Signal and Other Stories, by W. M. Garshin. $1.50, postpaid. Seventeen short stories translated from the Russian.

Smiley, by Arctausheal. The sensa- tional Russian novel now obtain- able in English. $1.35 net. B. W. Huebuck.

An Anarchist Woman, by H. Appen- goud. This extraordinary novel makes the atmosphere, the value and the tragic limitations of the social rebel. Published at $1.25 net; our price, 60c, postage paid.

The Harbor, by Ernest Poole. A novel of remarkable power and vir- tion in which are depicted the great changes taking place in American city life, business and ideals. Under the tremendous influence of the great New York harbor and its workers, a young writer passes, in the develop- ment of his life and work, from a blind worship of enterprise and effi- ciency to a deeper knowledge and understanding of humanity. Send $1.50.

Maxine Gorky, Twenty-six and One and Other stories from the Vaga- bond Series. Published at $1.25, our price 60c, postage paid.

Empty Pockets—Rupert Hughes. "If he has tried to tell the most rapid, fascinating and vivid mys- tery story of the season he has succeeded."—N. Y. World. $1.35 net. Harper & Brothers.

The Spy, by Maxim Gorky. A novel of the revolutionary movement in Russia. Sold at $1.50, our price 90c, postage paid.

Violette of Père LaChaise, by Anna Stronsky Walling. The story of Violette shows the spiritual devel- opment of every individual, the ad- justment of everyone to life and death. And more, it is the author's ideal for humanity, if everyone could live in harmony. $1 net; postage, 10c.

Homo Sapientes, by StanislavPrzybylsko- wiczki. A modern love story which is as well the greatest work so far written by Poland's greatest living writer, a work to which Eu- ropean critics have already assigned a very high place in the literary his- tory of our time. It should sweep America as did the work of Stendhal- a century ago, and it is al- most certain to be the most talked about book this season. Send $2.00.

Emuna McChesney & Co., by Edna Ferber. Incidents in the life of a modern business woman, with many of the same characters that have ap- peared in Miss Ferber's earlier stories. Send $1.10.

The Star Rover, by Jack London. Daring in theme and vivid in exec- cution, one of the most original novels Jack London has written. A California professor, condemned to death, spends his last hours writ- ing a MESS, which is at once a pro- test against capital punishment and a revelation of the adventure of the soul in various personalities and times throughout the ages. Send $1.25.

The Rat-Pit, by Patrick MacGill. A novel which voices the life and struggle of small artisans and unskilled labor. Realism fused with imagina- tion and sympathy. A new genre in contemporary fiction. Send $1.25.

HUMOR

Dead Souls—Nikolai Gogol's great humorous classic translated from the Russian. Stokes. Send $1.35.

Moonbeams from the Larger Lunacy, by Stephen Leacock. $1.15. Sketches with a burlesque setting. Droll and quiet humor.

POETRY AND DRAMA

Enjoyment of Poetry, by Max Eastman. "His book is a masterpiece," says J. B. Kerfoot in Life. By mail $1.35.

Child of the Amazonas, and other Poems by Max Eastman. "Mr. East- man has the gift of the singing line."—Vida D. Scudder, "a poet of beau- tiful love and feeling."—Wm. Marion Reedy. $1.00 net.

(Continued on page 21)
THE PAST AND THE FUTURIST

"That's the way with you people, you're always copying."
"Well, at least we're not copying you."
The Religion of Germany

Frank Bohn

I
n the private office of the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Dresden, a copy of the well-known picture of the boy Jesus at twelve years of age, measured three inches square. Above it, in purple and gold and white and red, filling a frame two and a half feet square, was the full figure of Kaiser Wilhelm der Zweite.

"Yes," said the secretary, "war has done much for the spiritual life of the German people. In the four centuries since the German Reformation the Catholics and Protestants of Germany have not been so close together. At the front we attend each other's services. We distribute each other's tracts. War has brought about spiritual unity in Germany."

On the train from Leipzig to Dresden, a kindly, intellectual gentleman, the postmaster of Weinerm, had permitted himself to become considerably wrung up in our conversation. "You shall see," he said to me in a tone of voice which caused his wife to call him to order, "You shall see! Your Roosevelt will never again be received by the German Emperor as he was before. Just let him try to call on the Emperor again. He will be greatly disappointed. Next year you may keep your Christmas gifts, we don't want them. I wish we might collect some of last year and send them back to you. The ideal. To send us a shipload of Christmas gifts for the children and then follow it with hundreds of shiploads of ammunition for our enemies to kill us with!"

But when the train drew into Dresden the old gentleman's heart relented. "Have you a place to stay in Dresden?" he asked. "No," I replied.

"Then come with us. We are going to the 'Christliche Hospize,'"

The "Christliche Hospize" turned out to be the Y. M. C. A. Hotel. Two blocks from the main railway station in Dresden, it was situated in a spacious, shady garden. There, as in many Y. M. C. A. hotels in the United States, one has excellent rooms and board for little more than half the regular price. I took a long walk in the great park of Dresden and then spent the evening at the Y. M. C. A.

Now, the strangest thing about the human race, as most everyone finds out, sooner or later, is that the different sections of the species are so much alike. The Y. M. C. A. at Dresden was exactly like the Y. M. C. A. at Boston, or Indianapolis, ought to be, although I have never been in the latter places and cannot say for sure. The young man who showed me about the Dresden Y. M. C. A. during the evening was the same good, kind, harmless soul who is on hand at the Y. M. C. A. every evening the world over. He was lately from the country and wore a celluloid collar. It was perfectly evident that from the day of his birth he had not committed one evil deed or permitted an impure thought to enter his mind. The father of the Y. M. C. A., whom I met later, was a Landwehr Captain. He welcomed me with his whole soul. Would I do them the honor of seeing all they had, staying as long as I possibly could, and carrying off all I wished when I left? . . . I visited the library, the cafe, the small and the large room for prayers, the boys' playroom, and so on and so forth. When I got to the gymnasium in the basement it was quite late. A hundred boys were being drilled a Feldwebel (First Sergeant). "Why were these boys being drilled?" I asked the virtuous young man. "They are being prepared for service, in case Germany is invaded," he said. I went to my room and to bed and tried to go to sleep.

The open window of the gymnasium was just below my open window. I heard the stentorian tones of the drill sergeant as he gave his orders. A German major, while commanding his battalion, may give evidence of some note of personality. But the voice of a Feldwebel has a measured sound, like the noise of a strong man driving spikes with a sixteen pound hammer. He told the boys that their first duty was to obey, absolutely, that that was the one law of life for them. If he told them to sit on the floor, they must sit on the floor. If he told them to stand on their heads, their position must be instantly reversed. This was no boy scout company drilling. The boys were kept at it, hour after hour. The voice of the drill sergeant grew louder and louder. The commands suggested to me the deep-mouthed bark of a big dog. I sat up in bed and thought about it all. Everything now happening in Europe seemed plain to me at that moment, although I have forgotten the conclusions I then came upon.

Later in the evening some further entertainment developed. A men's choir assembled in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium for a practice hour. It was evident that the choir had lately lost many of its members and was breaking in recruits. Nevertheless they did very well. They sang the wonderful songs of home and country which are the heart and soul of German music, and of which there are twenty in Germany for every one in English. There was tremendous power in the singing, and the love of loyal hearts, and infinite hope. Their music was a part of the national defense, as much as the Krupp guns and the Zeppelin Corps.

As dreams came "to mix themselves with my thoughts and thoughts ran on to dreams," the last mundane psychical state that I recall was a comparison between Germany and Niagara Falls—the Fatherland going down, down, down, with a tremendous roar of terror and all the power wasted. In the morning I arose very early and breakfasted with the matron, alone. The matron was such a woman as you find in charge of one of the dormitories at Bowdoin College overnight. She was tall and straight as a lance. Her face was fine and intellectual. She was exceedingly polite and so didn't burst out upon me immediately about the ammunitions of the house. We sat about a long, black table. Meanwhile we talked about the varieties of birds singing in the garden, the glories of the May morning, the difficulties of living a truly Christian life, and the infinite satisfaction that comes from having some important work to do in the world and getting out "on the job" early. With the second cup of coffee she poured for me I noticed that her hand trembled a little.

"You Americans," she said, "why do you sell ammunition to our enemies? Do your countrymen think of nothing but money?"

By way of explanation, let me say that for the first ten days in Germany I was mere as a lamb, but, having found that most everybody was amenable to argument, I came to express my views openly, without fear of insult, not to speak of going to jail. My generous and good woman," I said, "do you know, that just a year ago, when President Wilson made war upon Mexico, that your great Krupp corporation dispatched a stupendous shipload of arms and ammunition to that despicable murderer, Huerta? In fact, America spent millions of dollars and quite a number of American sailors and marines were killed, for the sole purpose of keeping you Germans from giving assistance to Huerta?"

"No," said the good woman, "I didn't know that."

"You ought to know it," I replied.

"Did you know that two weeks before the opening of the present war, that Germany sent hundreds of machine guns to Russia? Do you realize that German soldiers are now being killed by machine guns which German workmen have made and German capitalists have sold?"

"No," said the matron, "I didn't know that."

"Forgive me, my dear woman, but you ought to know it," I added. At this point she rose, and leaving her coffee steaming and me alone at the table, without a spoken word to accompany her sorrowful look, she left the table.

Half an hour later found me at prayers with the people in the hall. The tables were long, black tables. Before each there was placed a tiny song book. The Y. M. C. A. secretary, whose jet black beard made me feel sure that he would do well in the leading role at Oberammergau, sat at the head of the table. I was too busy to observe that this was the only democratic meeting I attended in Germany. The cook and the chambermaid faced me from the opposite side of the table. The matron, who was on the back of whose head I had last seen vanishing through the breakfast room door, was opposite, and three seats down on the left. Her looks were kindly now. She had forgiven me and my country, completely, as far as outward appearances indicated, though her heart was probably still given over to warlike palpitations. I joined lustily in the hymn. Being translated, it went something as follows:
THE MASSES

Take Jesus with you, all the way,
He will guide and protect you.
Though the heathen rage without,
And would devour you, hide, hair and bone,
Your faith will keep you whole.

The secretary prayed and then made a few remarks—talks with which to begin the day. He said that the tendency was for Christian doctrine, having been preached into one ear, to very quickly and easily make its exit from the other ear. Hence he would not make many words of the thought of the morning contained in the Scriptural reading. Believing the doctrines was hardly a beginning of Christian life. The fact itself lay in the deed. "Hence go forth, and let all that you are and do be toward the salvation of your soul, and full of help for your brethren along the way, that they neither stumble nor fall!"

Five minutes later, I was in the secretary's private office. The talk we had was face to face and heart to heart. I went at him pretty hard. There is room here for only what he said.

"We have six hundred senior members of our Y. M. C. A. Two hundred and thirty are in the field and more are going every day.

"When the war started I was a German delegate at the International Y. M. C. A. Congress, in London. I was a guest at the home of one of our English leaders, a colonel in the British Army. The war came, and the very thought of it was terrible. I rushed from the house of my host and escaped from London, just in time to prevent my arrest and imprisonment."

"You ask, Why are these Christian nations at war? I answer that there are no Christian nations. There are a few Christians in each nation. The growth of humanity is a growth downward."

"We Germans are not responsible for the war. Our enemies are wholly responsible. They maliciously attacked us. It will be fifty or a hundred years before we Y. M. C. A. men of Germany can work in harmony with the Y. M. C. A. men of England. Yet I think they and we have the same view about the war—it is a punishment sent upon us by Almighty God on account of our sins. After all, the war has brought many excellent results. I see a deepening of the spiritual life of Germany, everywhere. Thousands of men who never before turned their faces heavenward are now looking up to God, and praying for forgiveness of sins. Our field workers report that they never dreamed of such revivals of religion as have marked their work in the camps and in the field. Here is a postal card I received from the front a few days ago. I knew the young man who wrote it very well, indeed. He used to come around the Y. M. C. A., but he was never really interested in religion and the salvation of souls. This card tells me that he has found Jesus, and rests assured in the consciousness of the forgiveness of his sins. A few days after I received this card the young man was killed in battle. He died a saved man and his soul is in Heaven at this moment. There are thousands of such cases. What is Christianity for, if not to make us bear our trials and tribulations peacefully, with the realizing sense that they are necessary for our good? In this and in all the rest of Christian faith as in everything else, the Kaiser is leading his people. No one really understands it as we do. We know that we are misunderstood by nearly all the world. What difference can that make? We shall triumph over all that are against us, because we are in the right."

"Good-bye," I said. "Good-bye and God bless you," he said. "Good-bye," said the matron and the maid. "Good-bye, and come again," shouted the gardener, as I passed down among the great trees of the garden.

The Red Cross Lie

There are lies that one has to will to accept. Usually these are of the genre of love-lies, or lies that wear the mask of pity.

The most unworthy of these and the one gaining the widest acceptance is the lie that Red Cross organizations are humane and peaceful. Let the truth be said forthright: Red Cross organizations are part of the system of war; a part of the business or organizing killing and of maintaining the killing organizations in a higher state of efficiency, of increasing their power and lengthening their lives. A Red Cross body that has rescued 100 men broken on the battlefield, cleaned their bodies, healed their wounds, restored their health and revived their spirits, and returned them to the killing zones to continue their work of death, has recruited 100 soldiers for the war makers.

Moreover, it has recruited 100 soldiers by the help of the pacifist and by the leave of our most humane feelings.

On the credible pretense of succoring the wounded and rescuing the fallen the Red Cross has enlisted the prayer of the peaceful in its partnership with murder and used the power of the neutral to sharpen the swords of the combatants, and while it feeds its restored soldiers to every battle line it admits it has not an enemy in all the world.

Publicity and his noisy friend Time had torn from War's brow the halo of his glory, when came this new lie. It was a lie from birth. It did not ask us for our faith and substance to keep the warrior's standard flying in the wind of passion. We were done with that. But it said—Of your charity, kind friends, in the name of Christ, give to stop the wounds of your brothers.

And those multitudes on whom the plea of red glory could have no claim, those multitudes who were wrong in anguish and smitten in pity, gave—to the demonstrable result that their brothers have suffered more grievous wounds.

Feeling their pity and surmising their anguish and their sickness of heart, I am constrained to shout to them across the world—"The Red Cross is war's reddest lie."

And to whisper to myself—"But, alas, a most credible lie."

E. McK.

Press Pearl

Benjamin E. Davis will be hanged shortly after daybreak this morning. Dr. William L. Smith, jail physician, visited him in jail and said his condition had improved and that he could see no reason why he should not be hanged, from a standpoint of health.

Baltimore Sun.
ADAM AND EVE: HER FIRST MISTAKE

Little Submarines

"EVENTS which have passed since December 1, thanks to the Almighty—" thus begins the Sultan’s speech from the throne. With the Kaiser and the Sultan hobnobbing with the Almighty, it must be hard for poor old Roosevelt to put up with ErieKD.

All we are asked by the Plattsburg dynasty to believe is that the last billion dollars was wasted, but the next will buy a fine job lot of national honor.

At least it is a relief to know that our new army and navy are to be founded upon solid European precedents. They are to be used only for defense.

The opening of the New York grand opera season was a brilliant success owing to the presence of many New Haven directors who were in town attending the autumn prosecutions. The papers express relief because Broadway did not fall into the subway that night and mix the upper and lower classes.

Anyone who found a boom floating aroond after the sinking of the New York Constitution is requested to return it to its owner, Elihu Root. It has only a sentimental value. Advt.

Congressman Mann’s solemn warning that the Republican Party “cannot win with a two-spot” was followed, for some reason, by the withdrawal of Governor Willis of Ohio.

The Republican position on the Philippine question is now clear. The administration of the islands by the Democrats has been so bad that it proves the natives incapable of self-government.

A recent meeting of 5,000 in the tabernacle at Syracuse was berated by Billy Sunday, because the collection amounted to only $79.38. Still, that’s more than they collected from the same number at the Sermon on the Mount.

You never can tell. Just when Britain’s military situation looked the darkest, it won a brilliant victory over the London Globe.

Although the Interstate Commerce Commission had just ruled that students are not livestock, a member of the Georgetown football team was put out of the game for biting. Now we’ve got to have a new rule; civilians are requested not to bite the army.

The New York Times speaks of “the half-baked theories that prevail in most of the suffrage states.” Are the western states hungering for the theories that father used to bake?

It is a pleasure to learn that the postmaster who was suspended for criticizing the President’s engagement has been reinstated. A man’s fitness to handle mail should be judged solely by his attitude toward the tariff and Andrew Jackson.

Japan is sending ammunition to Russia. How times change! In the last big war, the Russians had to call for it personally.

Germany shuts off meat two days a week.” Every day’ll be Friday bye and bye.

God and the Military

It is a pity nobody can start an army without dragging God into the business. God has not figured in American politics for some months, but no sooner does the President desert himself and every courageous word he has spoken out of his own heart, military, than he goes and drags up a Divine Providence to help him sin.

“We are a God-fearing people. We agree to differ about methods of worship, but we are united in believing in Divine Providence, and in worshipping the God of Nations.” This is a plea for preparedness. What nonsense!

If we fear God, why do we arm against men? And if we believe in Divine Providence, why do we arm at all?

The one really hopeful thing about our getting ready with our guns is that it shows we do not fear God, and we do not believe in Divine Providence. We have that much sense.

Now, if we could only fear ourselves and believe in our principles, we would get ready with something better than guns. We would get ready with every kind of international munition that we can think of. We would bind these States of America together so close that they couldn’t fight, and then we would tackle Asia and Europe. It is a long, steep, hazardous, tremendous task ahead of us—to abolish nationalism. And that “God of Nations” will never help us. But it is the only thing that will ever burden the blood of the world from the vampire of international war.
"BUSINESS AS USUAL"

The Industrial Committee

The Commission on Industrial Relations had a militant statesmanship which made some people glad and others sorry that its existence would soon come to an end. Its official existence has now ended, but every fighting lover of liberty will be glad to know that it is to continue its work, unofficially, as a "Committee on Industrial Relations." It has been reorganized; the representatives of the employers (who refused to sign the Commission's report) will not be members, nor will that academic and "disinterested" person, Professor Commons, who joined with Mrs. Harriman in a minority report which outlined a method for the scientific and bureaucratic enslavement of the workers, by way of replacing the crude methods of exploitation now in vogue. Others have been added to the committee: Frederic C. Howe, Amos Pinchot, Helen Marot, Bishop Williams of Detroit, Dante Baxton, former editor of the Kansas City Post. Basil M. Mably, who wrote the Commission's report, will be the executive secretary of the committee.

With this personnel, the Industrial Committee will continue the work so auspiciously begun by its public hearings and its official report. This report is the most remarkable official document ever published in this country. If you have only read about it, you have missed something. In clear and illuminating words it shows how the employing class in America has overthrown democracy, abolished justice and created poverty. It finds the chief hope of establishing freedom and a general well-being, in the strengthening of the working-class organizations which are engaged in fighting the employing class. Indulged with a distinctly American idealism, it faces candidly and courageously the necessity of extreme changes in our laws and institutions. It is not a document which can fairly be tagged by even the most orthodox Socialist as "revisionism." It is the beginning of an indigenous American revolutionary movement.

The Committee will find its work and do it. But we believe this work will be best accomplished if it does not hope for too much from our legislative machinery, and does not spend its energy in lobbying for new laws. Its best function will be, as it has been so far, publicity. In a nation where, for various reasons, the newspapers distort and suppress the facts about our industrial conditions, the Committee can do no better work than bringing the truth before the nation.

It can do with regard to each particular strike as it occurs what it has done for the industrial situation as a whole in its Report, and what it has done, after a lapse of time, for the Colorado strike.

The Committee has an opportunity to become a permanent bureau of publicity for the American revolt that is being waged silently and desperately, in many places, that revolt of which we learn through the newspapers next to nothing. In the practical death of a free press, the Committee can tell us what is going on, even if it has to send out the news on a postal card. And since Silence and Misrepresentation are the greatest indirect aids of our industrial tyranny in maintaining itself, we shall have in this Committee a Public Servant of first rate revolutionary importance. There still remains the struggle, but for the first time in our history we shall be enabled to see the issues clearly, and have a chance to help, but not hinder, those who are fighting the obscure battles of American freedom.

THE NEUTRAL

HATED by all for her hypocrisy. Made sleek with gain, the Neutral Ally stands, Heaping the profits up with eager hands, Protesting loud her dread neutrality. That turns the death of men into a farce— A marvel and a hissing to all lands!... Woe to her, if the Kaiser's ruthless bands, Or the World's Bully, turn the victory! Faithful to none, and faithless unto all, And waxing fat on hatred, woe, and war: The clink of counted gold, her bugle call— A shell marked U. S. A. her only star. What will she do when other bugles sound And tramp of angry armies shake the ground?

HARRY KEMP
IT'S strange without you. I do not like it.
I want to see you coming down the street in the gay woolly stockings and that bright green sweater.
I want you to open the door of my house and brightly call "Hello!"
We used to rage about the way you kept us waiting—
Honored, were you ever on time anywhere?
But I'd wait—oh, I can't say how long I wouldn't wait if there was any chance of your finally swinging along and charming away my exasperation.
That was a mean advantage—
Letting us wait and then spoiling our grievance with a smile.
I want to sit over a drink with you and talk about the I. W. W. and the damned magazines and the Germans; I want to argue with you about building hook shelves and planting bulbs.
I want awkwardly to tell you a joke I heard yesterday.
And now that you are gone I want intensely to find you.
What were you, Joe? I don't think any of us really know.

Many are talking about your warmth, but there was something diamond hard in you.
Something unsympathetic and inexorable to all not you.
Many are talking about your gaiety; none of them loved it more than I did.
But I want now to know about those reservations; I want to know the you that brooded and lived alone.
They say you were so sunny; but ah, you were so subtle.
Much I do not know, but this I know—
You saw things straight; nobody put it over very hard on you.
The thing in you that thought was like a knife blade,
Muddling and muddling made you sick.
Your scorn put the crimp in a lot of twaddle that goes on among our kind of folks—
How I'd like to hear you cuss some of them out again!
Graceful levity—fiery dissatisfactions.
Debonair and passionate.
Much I do not know and never shall, but this I know:
I feel the sway of beauty when I think of you.
A fresh breeze; a shining point;
Pure warmth; pure hardness.
Much given and something withheld:
Undependable and yet deeply there:
Vivid and unforgettable.
Is that at all you? Would you laugh if you saw this?
Well, laugh, but I say, again.

Unforgettable.
Strong clear violet; the flash of steel;
The life of the party—a tree way off by itself.
Oh, what's the use? I can't.
I only know my throat's all tight with the longing
to have you open the door of my house and brightly call "Hello!"

JOE

[Signed O'Brien died October 27th, 1915]

THE MASSES

Unforgettable.
Strong clear violet; the flash of steel;
The life of the party—a tree way off by itself.
Oh, what's the use? I can't.
I only know my throat's all tight with the longing
to have you open the door of my house and brightly call "Hello!"

SUSAN GLASPELL.

Protection

HELPLESS Albanians, we will protect your property," say the Italians, as they seize Avlona, and take all the provisions so that people starve in the mountains.

"Helpless Albanians, we will protect your neutrality," say the Serbians, as they make a devastating drive through Albanian territory to reach the Austrians.

"Helpless Albanians, we will protect your civilization," say the Montenegrins, as they commit pillage, rape and murder under the protection of stronger races.

"Helpless Albanians, we will protect your lives," say the Greeks, as they seize Kortahe, and turn loose a fanatic soldiery upon unarmed Mohammedan peasants.

"Helpless Albanians, we will protect your septuagettes from depollution, when you have been exterminated," say England and Russia, the protectors of small nationalities.

"The Inwardness of Events"

L AST summer a group of corporation lawyers head ed by Elihu Root, together with the political machines, prepared a constitution for the benefit of the State of New York. On election day the people of the State rejected this corporation-made document by one of the most crushing majorities in American history. Thus was ended an effort to reduce American State government to a form closely resembling the centralized bureaucracies of the Kaiser and the Czar.

The older tomes of New York acknowledged their defeat—including even the "intellectual" and academic tomes of the Evening Post and the City Club. Not so with our younger "intellectuals" of the New Republic. Far from accepting the spanking the people had administered them, they came back with the following:

"Probably the most progressive state constitution which has been offered to the American people."

The defeat of the constitution was due largely to the "political machines of both parties."
The voters were "jeopardizing the future prosperity and even the future safety of democracy itself."

"The people don't know what they want to vote for so they vote according to their interests..."

But the New Republic felt the popular rebuke keenly. A great crisis was before it. And nothing less than a brand new sociology would do for the occasion.

Hence:

The deplorable result was not due to any conflict of interests between corporations and people. Oh, no! It was due to a merely intellectual difference of opinion and ideas between insiders and outsiders:

"The insiders with their minds open to the problem of administration and their minds closed to the feelings and needs of the ordinary voter; the outsiders blind to the importance of a powerful executive, but emotionally true in their judgment of the kind of men who have been their executives." Just a slight slip of the pen and Mr. Lippmann would have stated the whole truth, namely, that the people's judgment of their executives is correct, as well as emotionally true. (What ineradicable condescension in that expression!)

And, what is the conclusion of this new political science? The outsiders (the people) must compromise with the insiders. Why? Because the insiders are on the inside and they alone know and understand what is going on.

The insider is "in on the illuminating chatter of events." To the outsider "the inwardness of events is a closed book."

Are you in on the inwardness of events? If not keep out. The illuminating chatter of events—and the control of the earth—is not for outsiders.

W. E. W.
MARGINS—By Max Eastman

When a healthy nervous system has an idea put in at the top, some sort of action results in the lower parts. I try to keep mine healthy when I sit still and read, by having a pencil in my hand and jotting down swear words along the margins of my book. But that is hardly satisfying, and I often think how undignified those exclamations must look to anyone who reads a book after me. Perhaps if I precipitate these margins, and set them out in a form that can be understood—at least by the authors of the books—it will be still better for my nerves.

At last Dewey has got out a book about schools that can be passed around. You won’t have to go to see him, to find out what his theory of education is.

But he didn’t write the book. Evelyn Dewey wrote it. I think he wrote Chapter I, and the criticism of Montessori. Evelyn wrote the rest very well.

A little indecisive and repetitious as a book by two authors always is.

With what characteristic gentleness and appreciation he lays Madame Montessori back on the shelf!

With what characteristic self-forgetfulness he attributes the whole theory of the “School of To-morrow” to Plato and Rousseau, and the whole practice to various teachers just born the last year or two, when he himself started a “School of To-morrow” in Chicago fifteen years ago!

But Dewey can’t kill his reputation. It crops up somehow else every time.

Evelyn says that Mrs. Johnson of the Fairhope School in Alabama, doesn’t make children learn to read until they spontaneously want to. “We must wait for the desire of the child, for the consciousness of need,” says Mrs. Johnson; “then we must promptly supply the means to satisfy the child’s desire.” The desire generally appears at eight or nine years, but Mrs. Johnson even “goes so far as to prevent children from learning to read at too early an age.”

“I don’t know whether the joke is on Evelyn Dewey or Mrs. Johnson. But that kind of going far—so far you come around behind where you started, is the danger to every evangel. And most of all to the highest of all—the evangel of letting people be themselves.

I LIKE to praise Anna Walling’s book, because both its author and her heroine seem so foreign to me, having that intensity of sustained fervor of life in reality, that seems only for Russians and Jews. They burn with hot fire. Their being is self-justified. They live and are sources of life. I used to wonder if they ever sleep, for I could not imagine them sleeping. As for me, I loaf, and smolder, and dodge life, and tinker with trivialities, until at last some momentary conflict of stimulus and impulse creates me, and I do enter into those ecstasies and agonies that flesh was never made for, and lie limp and melancholy very soon after. I think I like to praise her book, because I want to assert that although I can not be these things, I can at least have them.

It is a beautiful book, and not like any other—especially any other of this day and place. Exalted while all the rest are being sophisticated; exalted without being exalted; exalted without falling down in any sentence.

A BOOK I picked up at The Poetry Bookshop in London, that is made out of reality by a real person, is “The Contemplative Quarry,” by Anna Wickham. I call Anna Wickham mighty wise and saucy. I never got more fun and truth out of a little paper of poems.

She has about the same attitude to rhyme and meter that she has to “mane and proper man.” Use him, and—well, love him (you can’t help it), but don’t be fooled.

“I have to thank God I’m a woman,
For in these ordered days a woman only
Is free to be very hungry, very lonely. . . .”

But “Meditation at Kew” is a poem that suggests what is in the book.

ALAS for all the pretty women who marry dull men,
Go into the suburbs, and never come out again,
Who lose their pretty faces, and dim their pretty eyes,
Because no one has skill or courage to organize.

What do these pretty women suffer when they marry?
They bear a boy who is like Uncle Harry,
A girl who is like Aunt Eliza, and not new.
These old dull marriages must breed true.

I would enclose a common in the sun,
And let the young wives out to laugh and run;
I would steal their dull clothes and go away,
And leave the pretty naked things to play.

Then I would make a contract with hard Fate
That they see all the men in the world and choose a mate.

And I would summon all the pipers in the town
That they dance with Love at a feast, and dance him down.

From the gay unions of choice
We’d have a race of splendid beauty, and of thrilling voice.

The World whips frank gay love with rods,
But frankly, gaily, shall we get the gods?

RESERVED SMITH, of Vassar College, sends me a reprint from the Journal of Psychology called “Luther’s Early Development in the Light of Psycho-analysis.” The heart of it is that Luther’s doctrines of the bondage of the will and salvation by faith, and his break with the church, were the result of unmanageable concupiscence and auto-erotic habits in a monk of neurotic temperament. Such the foundation of Protestantism! Rather shocking to one piously reared in the economic interpretation of the Reformation.

YOU rarely read through a book by a professor. Because professors write one book for every thought, and you are more likely to find the thought if you don’t read too much of the book.

But Horace M. Kallen’s book on Henri Bergson and William James is written with a brain that has blood as well as serum in it. I read it through.

To condense Bergson and James, heart and mind, into a small volume—and expand with illustrations a Freudian interpretation of the whole history of philosophy at the same time—no professorial trick. That kind of thing would wreck the professorial business.

I like Bergson’s Absolute Reality better than any other Absolute Reality in the whole of philosophy, but I agree with James that there isn’t one anywhere outside of philosophy.

What a soaring and fire-tracing pen James had! Stars and the world!

Sometimes I feel almost superior, though, to James’ platitudinous declarations. James merely thinks in philosophy what every sensitive man thinks of it.

Brilliantly and passionately he declares that the universe is pluralistic.

“Whadeys mean, pluralistic?”

“Why—why—there’s more than one thing in it!”

“God almighty, did you have to write a book about that!”

Could you, I ask myself, even supposing you had the genius, be brilliant and passionate about so obvious a thing? Well, you could if you had stayed long enough trying to live and breathe in the atmosphere of academic metaphysics. You would think that obvious thing needed saying terribly. We don’t yell for open windows when we are on the outside of the house. And we naturally think they look a little frantic in there.

I feel that way sometimes about James. I told him once, after his lecture at Columbia defining the meaning of an idea as “its result in action,” that the meaning of that idea was to resign your chair of philosophy. He pretty well agreed.

But that is too true to be good.

After all, the sensitive man is lucky rather than wise—he is free of metaphysical knowledge, but he is not immune. James offered the world immunity from that disease, forever. He died, as you might say, to save us. For his passing from science to philosophy was a kind of death.

Horace M. Kallen tries to do at the beginning of Chapter III what he can not do—write reality like James. I didn’t read that through.

Bergson—it seems to me—talks well to science. Science might learn from him to be more philosophic.

James talks to philosophy. Philosophy learns from him to be wise.

“William James and Henri Bergson,” by Horace M. Kallen. The first book in that Bergson belongs to the philosophic tradition: James is the philosopher of a new age.
President Wilson: "But I don't want them — there isn't any enemy to fight."

Morgan, Schwab & Co.: "You buy these guns and we'll get you an enemy!"

A BALLAD

T'he Biggest man in creation?
It was Joseph the Nazarene.
Jon, the Yiddisher 'carpenter stiff,'
The husband o' Heaven's Queen!
Joe, that was smitten o' Mary,
Joe, that was game as grit—
When she came weepin' to 'is arms,
Neddin' a father for it.

Joe was as right as the compass,
Joe was as square as the square.
He knew men's ways with women,
An' Mary was passin' fine!
Passin' pretty an' helpless,
She that he loved th' most.
God knew what he told th' neighbors,
But he knew it wasn't no Ghost.

He tek th' tale as she told it,
And never th' bat of an eye,
Ever thin' 'is 'art was breakin'
Under the load of th' lie—
Steady, an' 'game an' tender,
When she needed a strong man's care,
An' then he saddled th' ol' jackass,
An' took 'er away from there.

Took 'er away from th' neighbors,
That spoke o' th' fit o' 'er gown,
Took 'er away from th' goslings,
That made 'er th' talk o' th' town.
Comforted, soothed and cuddled,
Just as he might ha' done.
If it that was heavy within 'er
Was Joseph's, the Carpenter's son.

Joe, he was silent an' tender,
Joe, he was game as grit.
But I'll bet when he walked by Mary,
To have been the father of it,
He'd a give all 'is 'opes o' heaven.
He'd a shot like a bat into 'all,
The minute he knew for certain
That mother and child was well.

Patience surpassin' th' mountains,
Kindness shamin' th' rain,
When th' sickness came upon her,
An' she cursed 'im in 'er pain;
So he came to the manger
With Mary makin' 'er moan.
An' 'e 'old 'er 'and while she labored
With a child than 'e'd never 'ad none!

He looked at th' 'art in pity,
An' 'e held it up to 'er breast,
That ached with an awful feeling
That Mary never guessed.
And 'im an' th' 'art they 'it it
(Can't you see 'im struggling there in 'er they lookin' at th' breast like 'is eyes a'd fall 'er up? Can't you see 'im's freckled face when 'e'd done 'im th' blow o' th' 'arrow out? Can't you see 'im's neck breakin' at 'im, and breakin' at 'im, an', an', as 'is neck breakin', 'is eyes crowdin' 'im, an', 'is soul, as 'is soul laughin' as breath? "Yer mine, God don't it, yer mine anyway." An' ain't you 'a' made 'im 'ad 'er, lookin' at 'em, sayin', "Daddy?" Yes, 'im an' th' 'art, they 'it it.)

An' after th' years had run,
Folks th' no more o' 'im groop.
But called 'im the Carpenter's Son.

—Williams
The immemorial orchestra plays its immemorial tunes, the sons of Adam lean a little forward with a beating light on their faces, the curtain rises, and the dream begins. The stage is filled with Beauty, in the form of four dozen female legs, while in the right wings Waughter, in the shape of a little man with a worried nose. The legs burst upon the scene in a blaze of light and sound, a kaleidoscope of calf and ankle, a whirl of soft pink feminine contours, a paradiac vision of essential Girl: the whole theater breathes forth a sigh of happiness, and the sons of Adam lean back in the seats, contented. The promise is fulfilled. "Come unto me all that labor and are heavy burdened . . ."

The legs, encased in pink tights, move forward and back, up and down, for a moment and back, up and down. Somewhere above them are lungs and larynxes that pour forth a volume of sound, in time to the hypnotic throb of the music. Gradually, in the middle, arms become visible, and vaguely connecting the arms and legs, pieces of colored cloth that finally become definite as golden tunics, green sashes, scarlet bodices. Moreover, they have faces, but they are not real faces of weariness or anger to disturb the illusion—they are masks, painted to express an impersonal and uniform pleasure in the exhibition of their inerther charms. Pink cheeks, histrion eyelashed depths that emit glances at the corners, carmined lips set in an imperishable smile—these are the perfect and sufficient symbols of a joy that never was on sea or land. But faces, after all, belong to another world, the world of reality; if one looks at them too long, one sees them, and the dream vanishes; they are extinguished presently by a row of flying legs, the scene becomes a chaos of feminine extremities, the music rises, to a climax and stops as the chorus leaves the stage. Enter the little man with the putty nose.

He speaks to somebody—in a rapid, monotonous, un-intelligible voice; it does not matter, he is telling what the plot of the piece is. His real function is revealed a minute later when two tramps, a tall one and a short one, enter and the tall one hits him over the head with a stick. The victim falls on his putty nose. The house rocks with laughter, and the gallery storms applause. The cares of the day, the harsh realities of life, fade away when in the golden land of never-never a tall man enters with his short companion and hits the third man over the head with a stick. Nations may rise and fall, and Dean Swift or Bernard Shaw may force to our lips a painful smile with his comments on our folly, but the true inebriation of laughter comes at the spectacle of a man hit over the head with a slatstick.

What secret wish is gratified when we see man who was created in the image of God falling bump on his nose? Irretrievably, by a profound impulse, we laugh. In the course of the evening, the small man is hit over the head fifty-seven hundred times; he rises but to fall again, more hopelessly than ever. He is kicked in the nose, in the ear, in front and behind. His nose is pulled into an infinite variety of shapes, being made to resemble every object under heaven from a telephone wire to a turpia. He submits meekly. Upon him the desire of the whole audience to see mankind made ridiculous is visited and revisited time without number.

Genially, casually, the tall man kicks him in the face whenever he notices him. The tall man has taken

"RFINED BURLESQUE"

Unadorned by the adjective, crowds were hurrying in—sailors, dock-hands, toughs, young men wearing the latest Arrow collar, and stout citizens of Hoboken, sometimes accompanied by their wives. The unswept streets of Hoboken were being scoured by cold and efficient wind which picked up the litter of dust, straw and paper and flung it into people's eyes and mouths, giving them a taste of the city. Over a low-lying brick building the ringing of a ship rose in confused detail against a cloudy sky. Against all this the arc-lit gondola promise of the theater entrance. In the front row, in an aisle seat, was a white-haired man at least two hundred years old; he had occupied that aisle seat once every week for so long a time that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Midway of the parquet floor sat a placid matron of fifty beside her complacent husband; their views on all subjects coincided exactly with those of Dr. Parkhurst; they were solid blocks in the fabric of our American civilization. About them was a dark grey mass of padded masculine shoulders, in which, here and there, girls in twos and threes made spots of color. Above, the balcony buzzed and the peanut gallery filled suddenly like the breaking of a dam. An orchestra of seven—the same seven who had played here since the theater was built—filed in. A hush, not of eagerness but of religious certainty, fell upon the theater. In fifteen hundred souls there was the calm which comes of absolute confidence in that which they are about to receive. No one had come there in quest of novelty, any more than one goes to confession for that purpose. They came for the familiar and satisfying benediction of burlesque. The old rives have changed a little since the time of our fathers, but the heart of the mystery is still there. The piece pretends, after the new fashion, to be a musical comedy. But the tunes are those invented by Jubal, the father of those that play on the harp and the organs—revised a little, a very little, year by year; the first choral awakes ancestral memories. There is a trace of plot on the program, and the name of an author, just as if it were something new! but no one is deceived. To put all doubts at rest, and to betray the fact that this production is simply the 10,000,000,000,000th performance of the dream-play imagined by Adam (after a hard day's labor pulling eucalyptus stumps in the wilderness to the westward of Eden), it is entitled "The Jolly Girls."

"BURLESQUERIE: By Floyd Dell"

With Illustrations by H. J. Glintenkamp and Stuart Davis

"Stuart Davis.

Drawn by Stuart Davis.
In and out between these episodes floats the chorus, shaking its immortal legs. The legs and their owners classify themselves into three ranks or hierarchies of fleshly charm; in front the "little ones," the "ponies," in the next row the "mediums," and last and most sumptuous the "big ones," the "show girls." The "big ones" are the pièce de résistance. No frills, no sauces, but a satisfying superabundance. All that the hungry eye desires is balled forth in these vast and shapely statues of feminine flesh, tipping the scale at not less than two hundred pounds. Two hundred pounds of arms and leg and bust and bottom; here is riches, here is Golconda: two hundred pounds of female meat! A thousand hungry eyes feast rapturously on the sight.

But this is not the ultimate magic of burlesque.

A storm of applause, and a young women enters on one toe, kicking the zenith with the other. A young woman? A pinwheel, a skyrocket, a slender feminine firework! Feminine? Not with the obvious allurements of her sex. Her figure is like that of a boy: boyish is the mischievous face that sparkles behind the tangle of her short curls. She is like a sword blade in a poppy-field. Her soul is adventurous, like her legs; she kicks open the zenith with her boisterous boyish laugh. She defies the code of the dream-world in which women burn with the ready fires of miscellaneous invitation; she is remote, unreachable, bewitchingly unseamed, cold as the fire-balls that dance in the Arctic rigging. She mocks at desire as she mocks at the law of gravitation; she is beyond sex. Nor is she mere muscle and grace. She has, shining in contrast to this impersonal world of sex, a hint of personality, a will of her own, and existence independent of the wishes of the audience. She smiles scornfully, indifferently, mischievously—and triumphs. This touch of reality heightens the illusion. The dream goes on.

The music pounds itself with endless repetition through the senses into the soul. The rhythm of legs becomes the rhythm of the universe. The audience are absolutely at one with each other and with the genius of the slapstick, who talks to them familiarly, as his friends. Cries and handclaps of applause mingle with the rhythm. The heart of the little theater beats gigantic, joyously, ecstatically, in union. The play rises to its climax. To the tune of "Yankee Doodle" the young firework appears, turning handsprings, an American flag on the seat of her pants. Walking on her ear, she crosses the stage, waving the flag in the faces of the audience. The audience applauds in patriotic frenzy. They would die for that flag...

The curtain falls, rises a foot from the floor, and discloses a row of legs—legs—legs, twinkling across behind the footlights. Into these legs are concentrated an infinite magic... But it is time to go home. It is time to re-enter the world of reality—Another leg appears, the eloquent left leg of the tall comedian, clothed round with heavy winter drawers and clasped by a Boston garter. It says: "After all, my friends, a leg is only a leg! Look at this and know the truth." The spell is broken. With a last laugh the audience files out, into the gusty, dusty, cold, harsh street of life.
The Nature of Woman

If the value of a book is in its power to release those who read it from the tyranny of ideas, then the three books I am going to mention in this column are among the most valuable books I have ever read. If I had a shelf devoted to the literature of intellectual emancipation, I should put these books alongside of Haeckel, Stirner, Havelock Ellis and Bernard Shaw.

Let me confess. Although I am a feminist, and believe in the high destiny of women, I have never been able to disregard the historical fact that men and not women have in general been the inventors, discoverers, poets, artists, in short the creative geniuses of the world—I have not been able to regard this with the serene indifference that is a necessary condition of intellectual emancipation. I have believed that there was an inherent difference in the nature of men and women which would make this generally true in the future, as it had been in the past. I believed that women would be happier, and the world better off, if women were free, but I did not believe that women would ever successfully compete with men in distinctly creative activities.

The reason I believed this was that I had been informed, in the most convincing manner, by the scientific authorities whom I held in most respect, including Havelock Ellis, himself a feminist, that women were nearer to the racial norm, and that men had a greater "variability" than women. This greater male variability has made great criminals and great geniuses—so I believed.

It was a pamphlet by Leta Stetter Hollingworth, reprinted from the American Journal of Sociology, on "Variability as Related to Sex Differences in Achievement" which first enlightened me. I do not mind admitting that the whole sociological world is still apparently in the dark. From this pamphlet I learned that this inherent variability, which I had taken as a scientific fact, was as raw an assumption as was ever put forward, without a shred of evidence to support it. It was pointed out that there was not, and could not be in the nature of the case, any scientific test of "inherent" variability. The only thing in the nature of a scientific basis for the argument was the alleged, and disputed, fact that new-born male babies have a greater physical variability than female babies. Upon this uncertain basis had been reared a whole elaborate scientific hypothesis which has been handed on from one sociologist to another as the gospel truth.

But this was not all. In another pamphlet, Helen Montague and Leta Stetter Hollingworth went into the subject of "The Comparative Variability of the Sexes at Birth." They made 20,000 measurements of new-born infants at a New York hospital—the most elaborate experiment ever made in this field—and analyzed the results. The conclusion is that there is no perceptible difference in the anatomical variability of males and females. So the whole reasoning by analogy from physical to intellectual variability falls flat.

I had wanted to believe that it was only, as this author says, because "nearly 100 per cent. of their energy is expended in the performance and supervision of domestic and allied tasks, a field where eminence is impossible," that women have not been eminent. I wanted to believe that not merely the practical genius but the creative genius of woman would add new splendors to the future achievement of mankind. I was restrained by the weight of pseudoscientific authority. I have been freed from that obsession.

The third book, also by Leta Stetter Hollingworth, is entitled "Functional Periodicity: An Experimental Study of the Mental and Motor Abilities of Women During Menstruation." We know how the "reverberations of her physiological emergencies" have been added by a noted British surgeon as a reason why women should not be allowed to vote. That was going a little too far. But it is an extreme type of the superstitious prejudice which this book aims to destroy.

Here is a fairer example, and it is from Havelock Ellis:

"It is but the outward manifestation of a monthly physiological cycle, which influences throughout the month the whole of woman's physical and psychic organism. Whatever organic activity we investigate with any precision, we find traces of the rhythm. Woman always lives on the upward or downward slope of a curve."

The general medical and sociological opinion is certainly that this period, which year by year occupies nearly the fourth part of woman's life, is a period of mental and physical incapacity.

Now this book is an account of the first scientific experiment on a large scale to determine the facts. Twenty-three women and two men were subjected for an hour a day every day for a period of several months to tests of muscular control, steadiness, speed and accuracy of perception, and fatigability. The subjects were of various ages from 23 to 45 years of age. The results are elaborately listed, analyzed, and charted. It sums up the result of this experiment to say that not only is it impossible to tell by the chart of any given case when the menstrual period is occurring, but it is impossible to tell whether a given chart is that of a man or a woman!

"Careful and exact measurement," as the experimenter puts it, "does not reveal a periodic mental or motor inefficiency in normal women." The reverberations of her physiological emergencies appear to be a product of the male imagination, stimulated by "the tradition emanating from mystic and romantic novelists, that woman is a mysterious being, half hysteric, half angel."

To quote again: "From whatever source or sources the idea of woman's periodic irresponsibility may have arisen, it is certainly very widespread. Men of the most varied interests and professional equipment have written on the matter—historians, physicians, lawyers, philosophers, physiological, novelists, and educators." And all that they have written is, in the light of experimental science, not true. —F. D.

A German Press Pearl

"When the news of Ludwig Frank's death had come and his wonderful parting letter to a woman friend was published, Germany wepted at too much depth and at so much tenderness, in one who had proudly called himself a social democrat."—Anton Findrich in the 'Vital Time.'

POEMS—By Jean Starr Untermeyer

HIGH-TIDE

I edged back against the night.
The sea growled assault on the wave-bitten shore.
And the breakers, like young and impatient bounds,
Sprang, with rough joy, on the shrinking sand.
Sprang—bet were drawn back slowly,
With a long, relentless pull,
Whimpering, into the dark.

Then I saw who held them captive;
And I saw how they were bound
With a broad and quivering blade of light,
Held by the moon.

As, calm and unsmiling,
She walked the deep fields of the sky.

THE ONE WISH

O if that you could walk the world in a visible flame;
People would turn to you—thrilled by this wonder;
But who would dare claim or touch you?
Men and women would draw back as you passed
In your shining and terrible garment.

That fire would burn away the mists of Spring
And shed a great light over the hills.
Wrapped in that tender armor,
Shaded by that valiant halo,
You would run the highroads of the world with a clear gaze—

A TEACHER

It was late afternoon.
Wearily a yellow streak of sunlight
Fell through the blue net curtains,
Making greenish shadows on your face.
And over your heavy shoulders
I watched you strain to sit straight
On the stiff chair by the piano's side.
While a heedless and harriding girl
Stumbled over her scales.

And giggled out her excuses
With the gauchy coquetry of fourteen.

I thought of your teaching aims,
And of how you were always giving
From your heart and brain;
Giving from the toil of years—
Giving yourself;
Of the many you urged to harder striving;
Of those who were eased and lifted;
And of those—like this thin-souled child—
For whom sacrifice was vain.

And when a patient smile lit up your face,
Warming your eyes, but deepening the ruts of care,
I was reminded of lamplight in a well-loved room—
Lamplight that cheered, but whose drooping beams
Revealed the shadowness of near-by chairs,
And deepened the shadows.
A NEW WOMAN?—By Dorothy Weil

Mrs. Knox is my cleaning woman. For six years and more now she's been coming to me every Wednesday regular, and never missed a day. And there never was a woman like her to clean straight through from top to bottom.

Wednesday morning, three or four weeks ago, when I was expecting her as usual, she called me up.

"I can't come this morning, Miss' Bullock," she said.

"Why, what's the trouble, Mrs. Knox? Are you sick?"

"Well," she answered kind of slow, "I'm going to the hospital."

"To the hospital! Whatever is the matter with you?"

"It's—it's—well, it's another child comin'," she said, so low I could just barely get it.

I almost let the telephone hang up out of my hand.

"W—what?" I managed at last. "Why, how can it? Your husband?"

Her husband's a good-for-nothing that she's had to get away from; though she, being a Catholic, couldn't divorce him once for all.

"Oh, yes, my husband right enough," she came back, with a bitter tone in her voice. "I told you he'd be givin' me money this last year. Well, no man ain't givin' no woman money for nothin' in this world!"

"Why didn't you tell me about it sooner?" I asked.

"Why, you didn't seem to notice, ma'am, and some how I couldn't bring myself to be a tellin' of it. 'Pd it all fixed for someone else to call you up, if things hadn't been kind of sudden."

Well, what could I say? "There, there, Mrs. Knox, I hope it's all for the best," I said. And then I told her to send over one of the boys for some things I had around.

Of course Henry had to know about it. He talked about the "senseless follies of the working classes," which didn't have anything to do with it so far as I could see. I told him straight that Knox was her husband right enough, if he had been off like a vagabond for six years and more.

"See here, Henry Bullock," I said, "who're you and I'd like to know, that we should set up as the Lord Almighty to judge his creatures? I've an idea that we can't criticize a woman who slaves every day cleaning people's houses and every night scrubbing out office buildings, to feed her family. It appears to me that most anything she does after that deserves forgiveness even if it were a lot worse than hearing her own husband's children."

Well, I had to have a new cleaning woman. That was how Jennie Brille came to me. A pleasant young thing, but frail and consumptive looking. She couldn't come up to Mrs. Knox, but she was awfully willing. She seemed just terribly anxious to please me.

The second week she had just got in and was drinking some hot coffee to warm her, when in came Mrs. Knox, ready to go to work again. I hadn't the heart to send either one of them off without her day's work in that kind of weather, so I told them I'd keep them both and clean down the attic. Jennie looked so grateful, I was glad I thought of it. But they'd been working less than two hours when Mrs. Knox came to me all hot and excited.

"Mrs. Bullock," she says, "you'll have to get that critic out here. I'm a respectable woman, Mrs. Bullock, and the honest mother of a family, and I'll not be working next a woman unmarried who has a child."

For a minute I just stared at her. "How—how do you know?" I asked.

"She told me herself!—and Mrs. Knox was so triumphant that, Lord forgive me, I couldn't resist saying, "Well, what of it?"

The minute it was out, of course, I felt as wicked as need be, but I wasn't going back on it for all that. "Wait a minute till I call her down," I said, and I'd tell what she's got to say for herself."

When she came in, Jennie," I said, "what's this Mrs. Knox is telling me?"

"Yes'm," says Jennie, looking from one of us to the other and trying to see how to take us.

"Have you a baby?" I asked nervously.

Jennie's face crinkled up, living—you know how I mean, if you've ever been talking about her child. "Oh, yes'm, I've got him right enough, bless his heart. I just couldn't keep quiet about him any longer when Mrs. Knox here told me all about her new one."

"Why should you keep quiet?" I broke in Mrs Knox casually.

"I don't know. I can't say as I feel anything wrong. But everywhere, every job I get—as soon as they find out about the child, off I go. It appears like a woman trying to earn a living for her child ought to hold a job better if she's only got herself to work for."

Jennie's big eyes were all troubled-looking.

"Yes, but the father? You're not married," I couldn't help saying, and Jennie came up with my own words to Mrs. Knox.

"Well," she said, "what of it?"

It was the vengeance of the Lord upon me and I couldn't answer a word; but that didn't stop Mrs. Knox.

"What of it?" she cried. "What of it? If you haven't got no religion to keep you straight, Miss Jennie, you might consider respectable women that has, and our children. It's only to keep my children from the likes of yours that I've put up with a drunken beast all these years. It's only for that I've slaved through the days and nights. I won't work side by side with your kind. I know ye."

"Well," says Jennie, "my work's honest and I don't see as anything else matters. I'm willing as another to work for my child. I'm working myself to the grave for him as it is," she said, and she coughed, stirred up as she was with excitement.

"Yes, but Jennie," I said, "there are other things that matter. How could you have the child? How could you do it? You look like a good girl, Jennie—"

"How could I!'" Jennie caught me up. "Well, I didn't do it for money from nobody, ma'am, whether he calls himself my husband or something else. I suppose you'll not think me so good, ma'am, but I did it because I wanted to. Well, look at me! It ain't folks like you in your comfort that can judge me. It's only the women that works day and night and year in and year out, and stands beatings and starvings andfreezings like mine that might have a word to say. That was why it seemed to me just natural to be telling Mrs. Knox here. I thought she'd understand. But I guess—with a mean tongue, the intellects' to understand the Catholic religion she ain't gone none left for ordinary things."

I broke in quick at that. "Jennie, don't you dare to say anything about anyone's religion. That's her busi ness. I think you'd be the better for a little of it yourself. I feel as though I ought to call in my minister right away. I'm sure I don't know what to do with you, girl."

"Oh, please, ma'am," says Jennie at that, "I don't want any of your ministers. He'll call me a 'cose' and send me to Denver or some place and put the child in a Home. It's only to keep the child, ma'am, that I'm living and standing all this. I tell you. You don't know what it is to earn for two of us, or you'd see I was dead in earnest to try it. This out-by-the-day stuff's terrible irregular, and people are always afraid they'll catch your disease, or that you'll die on their hands or something. And for anything else you say to decent clothes, and then they don't want you either if you cough."

"Well, don't you see from that," I broke out (I haven't been a Willing Worker all these years without being equal to some arguments)—"don't you see you're putting the thing off? You'll have to be separated from the child sooner or later."

"Not as long as I can help it won't," said Jennie, and at that Mrs. Knox broke in again.

"Oh, put the husky out, ma'am," she said. "She's naught a brazen thing, and we'll never get the attic done at this rate."

"Mrs. Knox," I said, "be quiet. This is more important than the attic! Whatever had got into me to say things like that. I don't know. But that stopped Mrs. Knox, so I hurried right back at Jennie.

"There's the authorities, my girl," I said. "I'm sure the authorities could take the child away from you on account of its health."

"Oh, please, Miss' Bullock," said Jennie, looking scared, "they can't if they don't know about me, and they won't if you don't tell them, ma'am, I ain't asked no odds of no one yet, so they ain't no one has got a right to butt into my private affairs. You won't tell 'em, Miss' Bullock; oh, please don't tell 'em. The boy'd be lots worse off than if I cared for him. I love the boy, Miss' Bullock, ma'am."

Was ever a woman in such a fix? Those big eyes of hers were running over with tears and I felt myself choking. And then Mrs. Knox, who has to so many children I guess she'd soon be rid of a few, gave a snort. "Mrs. Knox," I said, "if you'd rather be doin' the attic you can go along. I don't know what to do. I think you'd ought to tell me a bit more so's that I'd see clearer. How—how did you come to do it?"

I don't suppose I would have dared to ask a second time that way if I had been a real good woman, and remembered that the whole thing was taking place in Henry Bullock's bedroom; but I never gave Henry or his strict opinions one simple thought!

"I'll tell you all I can, ma'am," said Jennie. And Mrs. Knox, seeing a story coming, sat down to listen.

"Well, ma'am," Jennie began, "I was the oldest girl and my father had ten kids besides my oldest brother, who was always a regular tough and bum and is serv ing his six years now. And I've been taking care of babies and doing housework and washing and scrubbing all along, so you can see I'm used to it, ma'am. From before I was twelve I been working a dozen hours a day in a box factory or a clothes shop or a hat factory or something else, depending on where we lived.
From Germany—Real News

Editor of The Masses

Dear Sir—I called him out of a vegetarian restaurant in Berlin and took him to my room at the Kaiserhof, in the faith that because he was reading Forward he must have ideas.

"Are you a Socialist?" I asked when we were comfortably seated.

"I am an artist," he said, "and artists are individualists. We believe in the production of great men. Socialism suppresses the Individual." I did not argue. I wanted to find some one who did not believe in war. Some one who was not patriotic. I wanted to find a German that the German government as cordially as most enlightened Englishmen dislike the English government. I have been six weeks in Germany and talked with Fursts and Freiheits, with Grafen and Grafen, Doctors of 57 variety, Gehelnachts, Baron Excellence, Bürgermeisters and Direktoren, members of the Reichstag, mere millionaires and real business men, bell boys and porters. They all agreed—Germany had to fight.

I heard Liebknecht raise his lone voice in the Reichstag against the last credit of two billion dollars, which was almost hilariously voted by that composite body of Professors, aristocrats and shrewd business men which governs Germany. I wrote Liebknecht at once asking for an interview and received word that he had固定—4.2.1912—a vegetarian reading a Socialist paper.

"What do you think of the war?" I asked. Slowly he took out of his pocket a little paper called Die Abriessen for July 4th, 1914, and read me an article called Von Patriotismus. It was the most good-natured of the denunciation of the fetish of Patriotism, written just a month before patriotism began to make Europe and up-to-date 20th Century Hell.

Next day after some inquiries I found the latest number of Die Abriessen, the issue for August 21st, 1914. On the first page is a sketch representing war, that would delight Art Young. A sketch which is evidence that Germany grants more liberty to the press than many people suppose. The sketch is very modern art. Perhaps it is the art that enabled it to pass the Censor. Certainly it is not designed to bring comfort to patriots in these strenuous days.

It seemed to me the Editor, Franz Pfemfert, must be worth knowing. So I looked up his address and called. I think he was glad to see me. Anti-patriotic editors are lonesome in Germany these days, and in spite of the fact that he knows no English, and my German is something like a Chinaman's English, we got along very well. I found that he had been in prison, which is sure evidence that he had not lived wholly in vain. He is also a graduate of the University of Berlin. That he has an accurate sense of values is clear from the fact that he did not show me his University diploma, but he did show with some pride his jail sentence of three days for printing something the judge thought he should not have printed. It was only three days and that three years ago, and since then he has written on Patriotism and published uncomplimentary pictures of war, in war times. So don't get apoplexy denouncing Germany for lack of freedom. There is quite as much freedom in Germany to-day as in France or England, and the fact that Pfemfert has published Die Abriessen during a year of war is evidence of it.
SOME MASSES ARTISTS SEEKING INSPIRATION
THE MASSES

The Masses was an American socialist monthly magazine that published from 1911 to 1930. It was known for its radical political and cultural content, and it played a significant role in the development of the American labor movement and socialist movement. The magazine was closely associated with the left-wing labor movement and the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW), and it featured articles and essays by many prominent figures of the time, including Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, and William S. Burroughs.

THE TRUE BRUTE.

To the Editor,

A number of people have written questioning the truth of my story "The White Brut.", printed in the last issue of The Masse.

I am afraid that a colored man in Mississippi, making a holliday of it, The crowd was very large and by special arrangement most women and children were present to witness the sight. The fact that a colored woman was raped by a white man? Can any honest and intelligent person suppose that it is only the white girl who is in danger in the South? But the honest standing by? If I did not make the reader feel his inevitable helplessness, I shall never try to write again. I hope there are few brutes such as I have portrayed, but a strip of its rights, make it a subject people, and sometimes, when the decent elements in the community are slumbering, the brute gets his chance.

Perhaps I made a mistake in putting my story in Mississippi, for that is one of the few Southern States that I have never visited, but I said Mississippi because the incident occurred there. It is true, but it is not the same thing as saying the man who was the brute. I began with the Negroes in my own home, New York City, spending eight months in residence in a Negro community in a rented quartier and visiting hundreds of neighboring homes. In the past ten years I have frequently visited the South. I have seen the Negro on the farm, as a farmer in his two rights, or more often as a share tenant. I have entered his cabin, followed his children with him upon his crop. I know some of the Southern cities well. There is no Negro quarter which I have not visited in Atlanta and I happened to be in that city just before the rise of the race.

To the Editor:

[Framed image not transcribed]
The Marriage Revolt, by William E. Carson. Illustrated. $2.10 postpaid. A study of marriage and divorce, presenting evidence which seems to indicate that a new system of marriage is actually being evolved.

A Survey of the Woman Problem, by Rosa Mayreder. A profound study of the whole field, to which the author devoted fifteen years. $1.00 postpaid.

The Upholstered Cage, by Josephine Pichtin-Knowles. The author considers that the feminist uprising is the key which is to open the door of the woman-cage and give freedom. Send $1.50.

Woman and Labor, by Olive Schreiner. $1.00: A heart-stirring book, conceived and brought forth with prophetic ardor.—Current Literature. $1.35 postpaid.

What Women Want, by Beatrice Forbes-Booth Hale. A treatise of Feminism bound to interest everyone; to sum up and illustrate the movement for those who already believe in it, and to persuade the conservative to a more modern point of view. Send $1.35.

Fer and Conventionality, by Elsie News Farnes. $1.00: postage, 10 cents extra.

TRAVEL

PHILOSOPHY
Nietzsche, by Dr. Georg Brandes, the discoverer of Nietzsche. Our price, $1.25.

Affirmations, by Havelock Ellis. A discussion of some of the fundamental questions of life and morality as expressed in the literature of Schopenhauer, Hayyam, Casanova and St. Francis of Assisi. Send $1.75.

ESSAYS
Visions and Revisions, by John Cowper Powys. $2.10.

The WAR
Economic Aspects of the War, by Edwin J. Capps. Price, $1.00 net; postage, 10 cents.

BIOGRAPHICAL
The Life-story of a Russian Exile. The story of a woman's life in Russia, her imprisonment, her escape from Siberia and her coming to America. $1.50 net; postage, 10 cents.

How It Feels to be the Husband of a Suffragette, by "Him." Illustrated by Mary Wilson Preston. Price, 50c: postage, 5c. See adv. on page 22.

Plain Facts About a Great Evil, by Christobel Pankhurst. One of the strongest and frankest books ever written, depicting the dangers of prostitution in its most lurid aspects. (New paper, 55c., cloth, $1.00.) This book was once suppressed by Anthony Comstock.

The Sexual Life, by C. W. Malchof, M.D. Sold only to physicians, dentists, clergy and educators. $5.50.

Kraft-Ebing's Psychopathia Sexualis, only authorized translation of 1875 German Edition by Dr. Robert. Price, $4.50. Special thin paper edition, $1.60. Sold only to physicians, jurists, clergymen and educators.

The Small Family System: Is it Im- moral or Inferior? by Dr. C. V. Drysdale. The question of birth control cannot be intelligently discussed without knowledge of the facts and figures herein contained. Send $1.00 to Dr. W. E. Huelsch, New York.

Never Told Tales, by Rev. E. Eiler (pseud- onym of Miss Helen Brown). A plain statement of the truth as the most hidden of all subjects. Send 10 cents.

What Every Girl Should Know, by Margaret Sanger. Send 55 cents. What Every Mother Should Know, by Margaret Sanger. Send 30 cents.

Are you interested in the problem of Unemployment? Are you seeking for a comprehensive plan for the abolition of poverty? Then read Roseblatt's "The Social Economy of Cloth. Cloth, $1 net. "It is a book that ought to be in the hands of all people, no matter what party they may belong to." Judge Ben B. Lindsey.
Bankrupting a Great City (the story of Municipal Reorganization). A remarkable story of a municipality ever told—90,000 words—strikingly illustrated. This book tells how Three Billion, Two Hundred Million Dollars was the people's money in 18 years and how the city's resources were given away to individuals and private corporations. It shows how every ounce of fortune was created out of public franchises. While the city became insolvent. A story that will awaken A.L.L. the people. Cloth. 40 cents, $1.25, postpaid. Author and publisher: Henry H. Klein, Tribune Building, New York City.

Reflections on Violence, by Georges Sorel. At last a translation of the famous philosophy of syndicalism. $2.25 net. B. W. Huebner.

Standard Oil or The People. The book that will end the wealth-pow er of Rockefeller and restore the government to the people. How Rockefeller globalizes and exploits the wealth of the nation. 29 cents paper; cloth. 75 cents. New O. H. Klein, Tribune Bldg., New York.

The Failure of Regulation, by Daniel W. Hoan, Socialist City Attorney of Milwaukee. A thoroughly studied regulation as proved in the state of Wisconsin and elsewhere. He proves that government regulation and public utilities produce no result for the people, but has actually benefited the unscrupulous interests. Paper. 25 cents. National Office Socialist Party, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Causes and Cures of Crime. A popular study of Criminality from the biological point of view. By Thomas Speed Mosby, former Fardon At- torney State of Missouri, Member American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, etc. 356 pages, with 200 original illustrations. Price, $5.

Labor in Politics, by Robert Hunter. Just the most recent and strongest indictment of the political policy of the American Federation of Labor that has thus far appeared. It shows how this policy has corrupted many of the leaders and the rank and file of the labor movement, has robbed labor of some of its most able men, and has made the organized labor movement the laughing stock, the football, and the tool of the Manufacturers' Association and its political henchmen. A book worth reading and re-reading. Paper. 25 cents. National Office Socialist Party, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

The Trade Union Woman, by Alice Homans. A book on an important subject. The book contains 30,000 words written by women in the United States. This book contains the efforts they have made, the obstacles to their success and the 쉽게 illustrated. Send $1.50. D. Appleton & Co.

White Slavery—a necessity under the present civilization. By Ralph Braund. Send 80c.

Why I Am a Socialist, by Charles Ed- ward Russell; new section, "Socialism and the Great War," is the first genuine campaign that is being followed for the war. You must read it to understand your part. Send 50c.

Socialism in Theory and Practice, by Morris Hillquit. Former price 50c.

Why the Capitalist? by Frederick Haller, L.L.B. In this book a lawyer throws down the gauntlet to the enemies of capitalism. The book is a bitter and clear refutation of the falsities prevailing in Conventional Political Economy. Send $1.00.

Socialism Summed Up, by Morris Hillquit. This summary of his drive work first appeared in Metropolitan Mag- azine. Fine cloth edition. Send $2.00.

First and Last Things, by H. G. Wells. A complete treatise on the Rule of Life. Wells sets forth the convictions of his life, which profoundly influence his social faith, and have provided him with a rule of life. Send $1.60.

The Socialists and the War, by William English Walling. No Socialist can adequately discuss the war without understanding the knowledge that this remarkable new book holds. 12 pages. Complete documentary statement of the position of the Socialists of all countries. Send $1.50.

Capital: A Critique of Political Econ- omy, by Karl Marx. Edited by Fred Ringer, Cloth, three volumes, $6; also sold separately at $2 each. Send 20 cents.

Essays and the Materialistic Concep- tion of History, by Karl Kautsky. Send 50 cents.

An Introduction to Sociology, by Ar- thur M. Lewis. Send $1.

Anarchism and Socialism, by George Plechanoff, translated by Eleanor Marx Aveling. Send 20 cents.

The Struggle Between Science and Superstition, by Arthur M. Lewis. Send 20 cents.

SCIENCE AND ART

On Dreams, by Prof. Sigmund Freud. Authorized English translation by Dr. M. D. Eder. Introduction by Prof. W. Leslie Mackenzie. This classic, now obtainable for $1.75. New York.

How We Think, by John Dewey, Professor of Philosophy and Edu- cation, Columbia University. Send $1.00.

Three Contributions to Sexual The- ory, by Prof. Sigmund Freud. Price, $2.00. The psychology of psychosexuality developed clear, concise, and comprehensive. Send $1.25, postpaid.

The Theory of Psychoanalysis, by Dr. Sigmund Freud. Price, $1.60. A concise statement of the present aspects of the psychoanalytic hypotheses.

Know Your Own Mind, a little book of Practical Psychology, by Wil- liam Glover. Send 75c.

Hypnosis. How it is Done; Its Uses and Dangers, by James R. Cocke, M.D. The author divests hypnosis of its misleading and false connotations, and explains its rational basis. Its dangers are carefully described, and its usefulness outlined. $1.50. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Bos- ton.

Frey's Theories of the Neuroses, by Dr. E. Hirschmann, Price, $2. A brief and clear summary of Frey's theories.

The Evolution of Man, Boelsche. Darwinism up to date, in simple language, with rare illustrations, cloth, 50c. Kerr & Co.

The Mechanism of Life, by Dr. Syl- phane Ledeac, Professeur A L'Ecole de Médecine de Nantes. Translated by W. Deane Butler, formerly president of the Röntgen Society and of the Electro-Therapeutic section of the Royal Society of Medi- cine. Send $2.20.

HISTORY

Social Forces in American History, by A. M. Simons. An economic inter- pretation of American History. The economic forces of渭 the various classes which have led and functioned from time to time. $1.50.

An Economic Interpretation of the Constitution, by Prof. Charles A. Beard. $2.25, postpaid.

GENERAL

English Synonyms—George Crabb. The help of our homes, ourselves, and our children. Cloth. $1.25. Full leather, $2.25.

The Religious Revolution of To-Day, by Prof. James Shotwell. Send $1.00.
TO Art Students:

There is room for a few more pupils in the Art Class at the FERRER CENTRE, 65 East 107th Street, New York. The Class is held on Monday and Friday evenings. The Tuition Fee is two dollars a month. The Instructors are Robert Henri and George Bellows.

The Most Beautiful Holiday Gifts

"ARTBRONZ PRODUCTS"

Book Rocks in seamless deposit of Government bronze on heavy base.

Send for illustrated catalogue.

THE MASSES BOOKSTORE
142 West 23rd Street
New York

DID YOU KNOW

That WILLIAM PENN approved BEER as a temperance drink?

That PATRICK HENRY was a tavern keeper and manufactured malt liquors?

That JEFFERSON encouraged brewing and said, "I want to see the beverage (beer) become popular?"

That WASHINGTON made liquors and sold them at a substantial profit?

That SAMUEL ADAMS was a Boston Brewer?

That LINCOLN did not believe in Prohibition and at one time held a license to operate a tavern?

That FEW if ANY of the world's greatest men have held narrowminded views on the subject of drink?

That IN BETWEEN DRUNKENNESS AND NARROWNESS you will find practically all the world's greatest men, its healthiest men and its happiest men.

WISE MEN shun both drunkenness and narrow-mindedness.

WISE MEN SEEM TO PREFER BEER. WHY?

(adr.)

Books You Should Have

THE SEXUAL LIFE

Embracing the natural sexual impulse, normal sexual habits, and occupations, together with sexual physiology and hygiene. By C. W. MALCHOW, M.D.

Third edition, 6 x 9 in. 186 pages. Price, $3.00.

(Sold only to members of the medical and dental professions, to lawyers, clergymen, and other students of sociology.)

NATURAL LAWS OF SEXUAL LIFE

CAUSES AND CURES OF CRIME

A popular study of Criminology from the bio-social viewpoint. By THOMAS SPEED MOSBY, former Attorney General of Missouri, Member American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, etc. 335 pages, with 100 original illustrations. Price, $2.00.

SUGGESTIVE THFRAPEUTICS, APPLIED HYPNOTISM AND PSYCHIC SCIENCE

The C. V. Mosby Company, Publishers
301-307 Metropolitan Building
St. Louis, U. S. A.
Revolution

ANYONE can write Revolution—Revolution is written
By pale young men with the new conventional mind;
Though it causes, indeed, no such havoc 'mid humankind
As Samson's did when the Philistines were smitten.

It is easy to preach Revolution—Revolution in pink reviews,
Or flourish a Phrygian cap from the top of a steeple:
But if ever it came to an uprising of the people,
How many pale poets would stand in the leaders' shoes?

WILLIAM ROSE BENÉT.