Roosevelt on Labor

In his speech at chief Labor's, President Roosevelt included a section referring to the labor movement which requires an answer. The President said:

"Some labor leaders guided by doctrines of oppression of labor made the mistake of going too far. They were not wise in using methods which frightened many well-meaning people..."

They were hailed with satisfaction by the employers' press everywhere. The most powerful and most popular newspapers in the country, the Times, welcomed it particularly as a denunciation of all "dictatorship." Others professed approval of any further demands by organized labor.

On the National Picket Line

On the national picket line, Attorney General S. U. Quinlivan, who is the acknowledged leader, said that "the Government has made the people of this country wonder whether or not it is true that the Government is not going to do its duty."

He added that "the men of the picket line are not the men of the present Government, but the men of the past who are trying to fight for the rights of the people."

The attitude of the picket line is that of a government in action, and that the picket line is the only means by which the people of the country can prevent the Government from doing its duty. The picket line is the only means by which the people of the country can prevent the Government from doing its duty."
