FIVE CENTS

Jewel Tea Customer in Quadrangle

In one of the lunchrooms in the Quadrangle, a package of Jewel Tea in its token was found, having been left in the lunchroom a few days ago. It was on the platter, in the game of the token, and the melody of the token, the tea had been taken. This is a nice example of the courtesy of the employees of Jewel Tea.

III.

As the ugly truth about America's 'Sixties Families' emerges itself from the dark cocoon, what becomes apparent is that this phenomenon has been growing for some time. In three years of research by a group of anthropologists, 'America's Sixties Families' has become a major social issue. The phenomenon itself, as its advocates have long been aware, is one of growing social and political awareness among the younger generation. This awareness has taken many forms, but one of the most significant has been the formation of various groups and organizations dedicated to the cause of 'America's Sixties Families'.

The 'America's Sixties Families' phenomenon is characterized by a number of distinct features:

1. A growing sense of social and political consciousness among the younger generation.
2. A willingness to challenge traditional values and institutions.
3. A desire for greater individual freedom and independence.
4. A commitment to social and political causes, such as civil rights and anti-war movements.

The 'America's Sixties Families' movement has been influential in a number of ways, including the formation of new political parties, the mobilization of support for various causes, and the creation of new social institutions. It has also contributed to a general sense of social and political unrest, as well as to a greater awareness of the importance of individual freedom and independence.

In the years since the phenomenon began, the 'America's Sixties Families' movement has continued to evolve and grow, with new groups and organizations emerging to address a wide range of social and political issues. The movement has been both praised and criticized, but it remains a significant force in American society, and its impact is likely to be felt for many years to come.

The Housing Quandary

Even well-documented and well-read people who live in Minnesota and think they know conditions here, have been startled and horrified by the facts revealed in the series of articles on "How Minneapolis Workers Are Housed." We publish today the concluding article in the series. Now, what are we going to do about the terrible conditions revealed?

The facts are so ghastly, so shameful, so daughter to the Missouri studies that they cannot be elaborated here. But the facts are just what the facts are.

The very people who constitute the city government—men and women, who are supposed to be the watchful and the watchmen of the health and sanitation of the city, are actually making a joke of the health and sanitation of this city. They are allowing a situation to develop which the most comprehensive sanitary commission of this country would classify as a menace to the life and health of the city.

We have, in this city, hundreds of thousands of people who are living in conditions that are the reverse of wholesome. They are woefully ignorant of the sanitary facts of city life.

We publish today the story of one of the saddest and most shaming spectacles of the year—How Minneapolis Workers Are Housed. We publish the story to bring the facts home to the heart of every person who reads this page.
