Drivers To Refuse Fink Station Gas

Teamsters Joint Council Declares It Duty of Every Driver to See That He Is Served by Union Filling Station Attendants—Direct Service on Unfair List

In a declaration of war against spirit dealers, the Minneapolis Teamsters Joint Council executive board, not only affiliated with the International and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, has been hearing the breath of war. The Fink station is its target. A resolution was adopted by the Teamsters' "White Rat," a body composed of 9,700 drivers, to the effect that he is served at gas stations, is supplied at the expense of his station by a spirit dealer.

Using the power of the Teamsters Joint Council rallies to the support of Local 977 every driver in the Minneapolis area.

A meeting convened by the Teamsters Joint Council was held in the Home of Labor, 205 Washington Ave., Wednesday afternoon, calling for a demonstration to support the efforts of the strike committee at the Fink station.

The action of the Teamsters Joint Council on the spirit dealer is not only a powerful weapon to be used by every driver to refuse service by a spirit dealer, but a weapon in the battle of the common man against the spirit dealers. The Teamsters Joint Council has made the nation aware of the existence of that council.

Last week the establishment of a coordinating committee of the Teamsters Joint Council was announced to the United States, the committee is responsible for the success of the strike committee at the Fink station.

The Coordinating Committee consists of Louis B. Kienbusch as chairman, and A. R. Prentiss and J. R. Peters as members.

The Great Strike of July-August, 1934

Concluding Installment -- The Strike That Electrified the Entire Nation

On July 24th the Minneapolis working class gave Nen such a funeral as will never be forgotten. Twenty thousand workers, alone in the history of labor on the American continent, marched from the funeral services in the Rosemont to the Central Labor Union headquarters to demand a national union for all Minnesota workers.

Both John and John Belin, who died shortly after, were appointed workers in the Minneapolis Central Labor Union, and had answered the call of the strikers from the local front. They had stood their own on the picket lines.

On August 3 Olin raised the flag that had been placed in the street corners.

The strike was over, but a battle for the future had begun.

An organization meeting of woodworkers was held on Friday, July 3, at the headquarters of the Local Council of Trades and Labor Unions. The meeting was called to order by John W. Shannon, Secretary-Treasurer of the Union, who read the minutes of the last meeting. The Secretary then presented the minutes, which were read and approved. The Treasurer then read the financial report, which showed a small surplus for the month. The Secretary-Treasurer then reported the results of the last election, which showed that the union had gained 200 new members.

The National Picket Line

The union leaders had made it clear that they would be supported by the United Mine Workers of America, who have a strong presence in the area. The picketing was strong, with several hundred union members lining the streets to prevent the strikebreakers from entering the mills.

On July 18, the strike leaders announced that a strong back-up had been arranged in case the strike should continue. The strikebreakers, who had refused to return to work, were sent home. The strike continued, and the workers remained on the picket lines.

The Murray Weapons Manufac- turing Company announced that it would lay off 200 workers due to the strike. The company was operating at a loss, and it was not possible to continue production.

The strike continued into the fall, and the workers remained on the picket lines. The company finally capitulated, and a new contract was signed.

On the eve of the strike, the company announced that it would shut down all operations if the union continued to strike. The workers remained on the picket lines, and the strike continued.
