FIFTEEN CENTS

On the National Picket Line

Last week we talked about the formulation of the organized labor movement. This week we shall discuss the employment of our picket line, and the aims and ambitions of a few new members.

Second—We must have class unity, and a fight between the employed and the unemployed. We are one big unemployed, because a worker is a potential one. We are all part of the same struggle. And every unemployed worker is the raw material of our struggle. He is the potential member of our organized labor movement. If he is to be brought to building and construction, he must first be taken in to the picket line. And third—We must have an independent political party which will fight for the two broad parties, a party which will fight for the working class, its voice and instrument with which we can take the fight to the bosses. It is only when we have the picket line as a fighting weapon that we can organize the workers.

A classic example of the kind of politician which labor has beaten into submission through the use of its picket line is Miguel Grajeda, a tar man at the iron and steel works in Detroit. In the spring he was making $5 a week and is chairman of the Communist party in Detroit. He is a fine example of the use of the picket line by the organized labor movement.

We have the picket line as a weapon. We must use it. We must use it constantly. We must use it in all the places where we are not satisfied with the contract.

Nash Finch Strikers Dig In

Ottawa, Maine—Rejecting the strippers proposal of the Nash Finch company to end its strike, the strikers at the company’s plant here are determined to continue the strike as a possible permanent one until the company comes to terms.

Mr. John Young, one of the strikers, said last week, "The company has offered to offer us a wage of $2.00 a day, but we are not satisfied with that. We want a wage of $2.50 a day."

The strikers are determined to continue the strike until the company makes an offer that is acceptable to them.

Present Wave of Criticism Directed at City Officials Backed by City Charter Men

Some workers may have been puzzled recently by the recent wave of criticism directed at the city officials—the welfare board, the police department, the fire department, the city purchasing agent, the school board, employee-union relations, etc. In the opinion of many workers, the present wave of criticism is chiefly sponsored by the group of city officials. In any event, the employees have the right to express their opinion through the proper channels of government, in the present case the city council.

An attorney, Ben Fannin, is said to be drafting a new city charter which may be presented to the voters in the near future.

With the Limousines

By Dave Jansen

The red blood cells that circulate through the veins of the human body are known as human limousines. These cells, about the size of a red grape, are the most common type of blood cell, accounting for about 45% of the total blood volume.

The red blood cells carry oxygen from the lungs to the body's tissues. They contain the protein hemoglobin, which binds with oxygen and carries it through the bloodstream. When the red blood cells reach the body's tissues, they release the oxygen, which is used by the cells to produce energy for the body.

Each red blood cell lives for about 120 days before it is recycled by the body. During this time, the red blood cells travel through the bloodstream, picking up oxygen in the lungs, and then releasing it to the body's tissues.

In the absence of oxygen, red blood cells can produce a chemical called lactic acid, which causes muscle pain and fatigue. This is why it's important to get enough oxygen to the body's tissues, especially during physical activity.

The red blood cells are also responsible for removing carbon dioxide from the body. When the body uses oxygen, it produces carbon dioxide as a waste product. The red blood cells pick up the carbon dioxide and deliver it to the lungs, where it is exhaled.

Understanding the role of red blood cells in the body is crucial for maintaining good health and preventing diseases such as anemia. Regular physical activity and a balanced diet can help maintain healthy red blood cell levels.

Next time you look at a drop of blood under a microscope, remember that you're looking at tiny, hardworking limousines that are essential for keeping your body running smoothly.

Behind the 544 Suit

VIII.

As we near the end of the story about the Local 544 book suit, let us take a brief look back at the material presented in the earlier chapters.

We have shown how the 1932 strike victories of the General Motors workers and the meat packers in this area, and have uncovered the dollars-and-cents reasons that make the case for the Local 544 suit.

We have analyzed the plaintiffs' claims and exposed their base character. We have traced the unscrupulous trade union tactics.

We have presented a chronology of the historic flour in the 544 suit.

We have summarized the testimony of a score of union members, so that readers may judge for themselves their allegiance to the firm Associated Independent Unions.

We have described the structure, history, and internal organization of the firm Associated Independent Unions and the three unions Local 544 had the fight with.

We have described the accessories cases with which Local 544 had the fight.

We have presented the arguments of the 544 suit.

Why 544 Sought the Suit

The reader will begin to understand some of the reasons why Local 544 made the fight and defended itself against the suit, and why for two years the union has resisted turning its records over to outside examiners of union's books and records.

But there are other, equally weighty reasons, why Local 544 made the fight.

The General Drivers Union wanted to (and has made it a crystal clear) that we must fight with all our strength against any attempt by any in the unions to place financial records in such a way as to create an impression of financial or moral bankruptcy.

The union membership would have been alarmed and its reputation ruined if victory for the 544 suit were to be secured.

We must say that if we can pull the union out of these, we can do it ourselves.

And this is what we want to do.

Get Set for the Attack

Local 544 then planned a campaign that it fully expected would carry the day as early as May 22 when a special meeting of the union would be called to discuss the suit issue.

At the meeting, it was announced that Local 544 had changed its mind, and decided not to fight the suit issue.

The union's members would have been alarmed and its reputation ruined if victory for the 544 suit were to be secured.

And this is what we want to do.

To the members of other unions, we reiterate the warning that the 544 book suit is, and always has been, the test case of the trade unions in the country.

It is the test case of the trade union movement as a whole.

Many years ago James Connolly, the great Irish labor leader, wrote a statement about the struggle against the trade union workers which applies equally to Local 544.

The Minneapolis General Drivers Union found the suit issue to be the test case of the country.

And they, too, have taken the lead in the struggle against the suit issue.

Citizens Alliance, a group of influential labor leaders, has taken the lead in the struggle against the suit issue.

And they, too, have taken the lead in the struggle against the suit issue.

The suit issue is a test case of the trade union movement as a whole.

And they, too, have taken the lead in the struggle against the suit issue.
