Labor in Best Position in Many Years To Elect Its Own Candidates To Office—None But Central Labor Union Candidates Worth of Labor's Support in citywide election as Nation Faces Involvement in Second World War

Next Monday, May 12th, the people of Minneapolis will have the primary election to select those candidates which will be on the ballot for the final election. For years, organized labor has been such a dominating force in the election field that it will be taken into account on the city hall this year. Not only is the present reactionary trend of the State and Federal governments to support the war effort, but also the fact that organized labor has the financial and organizational resources to elect its own candidates.

The Minneapolis Central Labor Union, representing thousands of workers in every industry, is prepared to elect its own candidates to office. The union has compiled a list of candidates which it believes will best represent the interests of organized labor.

Nation’s Teamsters Averaged 80c Hourly on June 1, 1940

The extent to which the great growth of unionism in the trucking industry has spread is recorded in the latest bulletin issued by the U.S. Department of Labor. Hourly wages are 65c in 30 states, and present an average of 98c in 9 states, and 80c in Montana. Average wage rate of union drivers is 91c, an increase of 28c over the non-union rate of 63c. Non-union drivers made up the major segment of the industry, the 90c and 80c rates being in the non-union areas.

Highest drivers’ rate was for the New York operators of the Linek Transport Corp., with 108c an hour. The lowest rates were paid by the Pecos truck line of Pecos, Texas, which paid 88c an hour.

Wages of union drivers were based on 45 cents an hour, with a 10-cent differential, while non-union drivers could earn 25 cents an hour. Union drivers were paid 50 cents an hour for travel time, while non-union drivers received 25 cents.

Wages for Teamster drivers in the United States averaged 80c an hour on June 1, 1940, an increase of 28c over the non-union rate of 63c.

The position of taxes is listed among the major issues that have been discussed in recent months. In our opinion, all taxes should be kept to a minimum, and only when absolutely necessary. The government should not be a spending machine, but a service provider. It is important to keep the taxes low and efficient, to prevent overextension and to ensure the well-being of the people.

Readers are encouraged to contribute their thoughts and opinions on this matter.

Lincoln Milkenkirk

The financial crisis of 2008 resulted in a significant increase in unemployment. Many people lost their jobs and struggled to make ends meet. In response, the government implemented various measures, including stimulus packages and job training programs, to help those affected by the recession. However, the recovery has been slow and uneven, with some sectors of the economy recovering more quickly than others.

The Need for Area Councils

Excerpts from the Speech by International Vice-President Dave Beck at the April 10th Container States Convention in Chicago.

H.

The other day, flying from Seattle to Chicago, I occupied my seat next to a fellow from one of our organizing states. He was a union organizer, and was talking about organizing unions in the community. He said that the biggest problem he faced was getting the word out. "People have to know what we're all about," he said. "They have to understand that we're not just a bunch ofradical unionists trying to take away their rights. We're here to help them, to give them a voice." I thought about that for a moment, and then I realized that he was right. People need to know what the union is all about. They need to understand that it's not just about fighting for better wages and benefits. It's about fighting for justice, for equality, for a fair share of the pie.

Rockefeller Becomes an 'Anti-Fascist'

This is a brief essay on the underlying economic motivations behind the decisions made by the Rockefeller family and the corporation they founded.

A week ago the American people were told that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., head of the Standard Oil Company and a member of the powerful Rockefeller family, had called upon the President to convert to a program of intervention in the war.

Rockefeller said that after studying the war for many months, he had come to the conclusion that the World War would be a 'war of finance.' Unlike most able and wealthy business men who advocated intervention at an earlier date, Rockefeller's statements did not suggest that the war was justified in itself. He said: "I have all the money I have left in the United States, and I am going to make it last as long as I can."

The article goes on to explain that Rockefeller's arguments were based on a theory that the war was essential to the economic well-being of the United States, and that intervention would only lead to further conflict.

Do This Before You Apply

As many workers apply for jobs, they often look through the available job openings at the local newspaper. However, some potential employees may not realize that the job advertisements do not always accurately reflect the true situation.

A new technique known as the "Job Experience Survey" has been developed to help workers make more informed decisions about their job prospects.
