LET RUSSIA BE CAREFUL!

By E. H. Close

If we only thought that Russia was the in the need to receive friends and not at all important in the eyes of the world, we should do less in this critical moment. At first the world was in a great hurry to be friendly to Russia, to make her feel that she had friends in it, to cheer her up, but now that the revolution is over and the situation is practically settled, the world has cooled off, soured in dealing with Russia, and is turning to business once more. The world is coming around to the old idea that Russia must become a healthy, strong, peaceful, prosperous state if she is to be of any use to the world.

We need Russia more than ever now, and the world needs Russia more than it ever did and will probably need her just as much in the future. The world is more dependent on Russia for food, raw materials, and other necessities than it was before.

That Russia was for many years the most important factor in world politics makes her more important now. She is the only country in the world that can hold her own against any other country, and she can do this only by being strong, prosperous, and healthy. It is only by being strong, prosperous, and healthy that Russia can hold her own against any other country.

If Russia is not strong, prosperous, and healthy, she will not be able to hold her own against any other country, and she will be of no use to the world. The world will not make much of an object in this respect, and it will do more harm than good to Russia.

If Russia is strong, prosperous, and healthy, she will be able to hold her own against any other country, and she will be of use to the world. The world will not make much of an object in this respect, and it will do more good than harm to Russia.

Negro Comrades: Establish a Newspaper!

Did you ever think of starting a newspaper for Negroes? If you did, you have probably thought of it before, and you have probably thought of it many times.

A Negro newspaper would be a great help to the Negroes, and it would be a great help to the world. It would do more for Negroes than any other newspaper in the world, and it would do more for the world than any other newspaper in the world.

The Negroes are the people who need the newspaper the most, and the world needs the newspaper the most. The newspaper would tell the Negroes what they need to know, and the newspaper would tell the world what they need to know.
A WAGEVILLE TALE

A Story by A. Wagenknecht written before he began his prison sentence.

It was a dark and stormy night in Wagovalle. The wind was howling and the rain was pouring down in sheets. A group of prisoners was sitting around a small campfire, drinking hot tea and trying to keep warm. Suddenly, one of them stood up and said:

"I have a tale to tell you tonight. It will be a tale of horror and woe. But if you believe me, I will make it as easy to understand as possible."

And so the tale began:

Once upon a time, in a far-off land, there was a village called Wageville. It was a small village, with only a few hundred residents, but it was a happy place.

The village was ruled by a tyrannical king, who was known for his cruelty and his love of power. The people of Wageville feared him and lived in constant fear of his wrath.

One day, a young girl named Mary came to Wageville. She was a kind and gentle soul, who had been raised in a land of peace and prosperity. When she arrived in Wageville, she was immediately noticed by the king, who was fascinated by her beauty.

The king saw Mary and knew that she would be his future bride. He sent messengers to the girl's father to ask for her hand in marriage. The father was overjoyed and agreed to the proposal.

Mary was taken to the palace and introduced to the king. She was a bit nervous, but she tried to keep her composure. The king was a tall, imposing figure, with a cruel expression on his face.

"You are a beautiful woman," the king said, "and I will make you the happiest queen in the land."

Mary thanked the king, but inside she was not so sure. She knew that living in a land ruled by a tyrant was not an easy task.

The king then began to treat Mary like a princess. He gave her a beautiful dress and a horse to ride. He also made sure that she had the best food and the best entertainment. Mary was happy, but she knew that the king was really just using her to keep the people of Wageville in submission.

One day, Mary was walking through the palace when she heard a cry for help. She followed the sound of the crying and found a small, shivering girl in a corner. The girl was sobbing and crying.

"What is wrong with you?" Mary asked kindly.

The girl looked up at Mary with fear in her eyes. "My name is Jane," she said. "My father is a farmer. He has been taken away by the king's soldiers. I don't know where they have taken him."

Mary's heart went out to the little girl. She knew that the king was cruel and that he would never forgive her for speaking out.

"I will help you," Mary said firmly. "I will find your father and bring him back to you."

The next day, Mary went to the king and told him about the little girl. The king was furious. He wanted to know who had dared to speak out against him.

"This is a matter of no concern to you," the king said harshly. "This is a matter for the people of Wageville."

Mary was determined to help Jane, and she continued to search for her father day and night. Finally, after many days, she found him. Jane's father was alive and well, and he was overjoyed to see his daughter again.

"Thank you," he said gratefully to Mary. "I could not have done this without your help."

Mary was proud of herself for having helped Jane. She knew that she had made the right decision.

The king, however, was not pleased. He saw Mary as a threat to his power, and he began to schemes to get rid of her. He finally managed to arrest Mary and put her in prison.

Mary was heartbroken. She had hoped to spend the rest of her days in Wageville, but now she was alone in a dark and cold cell.

The story of Mary's brave attempt to save a fellow human being is a reminder to us all that no matter how big a task may seem, we must always try our best to help those in need. Mary's story is a testament to the power of kindness and the importance of never giving up on those we love.
Local Secretaries

Attention!

Some time ago the State Office mailed to all local secretaries a number of pink order blanks. We didn't have those blanks printed just to keep our printer busy—and furthermore we didn't mail them to get them.

We adopted a new plan for filling our orders and those pink order blanks were only a saving of work for us.

But then, we figured you local secretaries filling out the blanks didn't expect to have to copy all your orders for yourself, as you did before. So take the tip, please. If you don't want to completely fill in our order blanks, we have to make one of these out every time you fail to do so.
FREE TEXT BOOKS IN SCHOOLS

By L. C. Goldstein, Akron

When I first entered the Board of Education, I found the following advantage: in the addition of something for the public school system that the public school system is not endowed with the same advantages as the public school system. It is well known that the public school system is not given a chance to be anything. This was my first introduction to the public school system, and I am now ready to give the public school system the advantage of being a public school system.

THE GIANT BOWLS TO THE PYGMIE

The failure to take advantage of the giant bowls is one of the main reasons why we are not giving them a chance. The giant bowls are the only ones who are giving us a chance.
