CAPITALIST "NON-PARTISANS" WILL REDEEM PIGEON, D. O.

You can be a Republican, or a Democrat, or one of the unhardened Socialists, but if you want to be real, you can't escape the fact that the 6th of August is the birthday of the great bird of peace.

If you're a Republican, you might want to view your birthday as a birthday for the loaf of bread. After all, isn't bread a great gift? A loaf of bread can make you happy, and it can make you think. It can make you feel like you're part of something bigger than yourself. It can make you feel like you're part of a community, or a nation, or a world. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth fighting for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth sacrificing for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth dying for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth living for.

If you're a Democrat, you might want to view your birthday as a birthday for the right to vote. After all, isn't voting a great gift? A right to vote can make you happy, and it can make you think. It can make you feel like you're part of something bigger than yourself. It can make you feel like you're part of a community, or a nation, or a world. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth fighting for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth sacrificing for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth dying for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth living for.

If you're a Socialist, you might want to view your birthday as a birthday for the right to work. After all, isn't work a great gift? A right to work can make you happy, and it can make you think. It can make you feel like you're part of something bigger than yourself. It can make you feel like you're part of a community, or a nation, or a world. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth fighting for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth sacrificing for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth dying for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth living for.

And if you're a Republican, a Democrat, or a Socialist, you might want to view your birthday as a birthday for the opportunity to be free. After all, isn't freedom a great gift? An opportunity to be free can make you happy, and it can make you think. It can make you feel like you're part of something bigger than yourself. It can make you feel like you're part of a community, or a nation, or a world. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth fighting for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth sacrificing for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth dying for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth living for.

And if you're a Republican, a Democrat, or a Socialist, you might want to view your birthday as a birthday for the chance to be happy. After all, isn't happiness a great gift? A chance to be happy can make you happy, and it can make you think. It can make you feel like you're part of something bigger than yourself. It can make you feel like you're part of a community, or a nation, or a world. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth fighting for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth sacrificing for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth dying for. It can make you feel like you're part of something that's worth living for.

And if you're a Republican, a Democrat, or a Socialist, you might want to view your birthday as a birthday for the chance to be free, to be happy, to work, to vote, and to be part of something bigger than yourself. After all, isn't it worth fighting for, sacrificing for, dying for, living for, and being a part of something bigger than yourself?
May Day 1919: A Memorial to the Revolution

BY ALFRED WAGNER

The centennial anniversary of May Day was celebrated with a mass meeting of workers, who gathered at the hall of the Trades and Labor Congress on May 1st. The meeting was addressed by John Clum, the secretary of the Congress, and George M. Washington, the national president of the Congress. The speeches were followed by a roll call of the names of those who had worked for the advance of labor, and by a presentation of a resolution for the permanent establishment of a monument to the memory of the martyrs of the revolution.

Red Cross Worker Tells Truth About Russia

(Life in U.S. Federal Prison)

(article continued from last week)

Dear Colonel [Name],

This week I was able to send out a package which contained a few presents for the boys and girls I care for in Russia. The boys were particularly happy to receive some new clothes, and the girls were thrilled with the dresses I had sent them. I am very proud of the fact that I was able to send these packages, and I hope that they will bring some joy and comfort to the children.

I am glad to report that the conditions in the prison are improving. The food is better, and the inmates are being treated more humanely. I have been able to visit several of the prisoners, and I am encouraged by their spirits and the progress they are making.

I wish I could bring some news of any particular individual, but I am afraid that the situation is still very difficult and that many of the prisoners are still in need of assistance.

I will keep you updated on any developments. In the meantime, please continue to support the work of the Red Cross.

Yours sincerely,
[Your Name]

Life in U.S. Federal Prison

Dear Colonel [Name],

I am writing to tell you about my experiences in the federal prison. I have been there for several weeks now, and I am beginning to settle in.

The conditions are tough, but I am managing to get by. I have been able to find work as a janitor, and I am making a little money. I am saving up to send some money to my family in Russia.

I miss my family very much, and I think about them every day. I wish I could be with them, but I know that I have to stay here until my sentence is over.

I am not sure how long I will be here, but I know that I will be grateful to be free. I will keep you updated on any developments.

Sincerely yours,
[Your Name]
