34 Organizations Choose Delegates to N.Y. Conference

CONDEMN "AGE" BAN

NEW YORK, November 13.—A meeting of labor leaders and organizations representing 34 labor bodies was held here today to condemn the New York Times's "Defend Press" editorial last week. The meeting was called to the action of the American Federation of Labor which denounced the Times's "Defend Press" article for propounding the thesis that "the automobile worker has no right to publicize his occupation of toil." The labor leaders agreed to make a joint protest against the "Defend Press" statement and to take action against any organization which will not participate in the joint protest.

In a statement by the American Federation of Labor, the organization declared that "the automobile worker has no right to publicize his occupation of toil." The statement continued: "The automobile worker is a human being, and as such he has the same right to freedom of speech as any other citizen of the United States. The automobile worker is entitled to the same rights as any other citizen, and he is entitled to express his opinions, whether they be favorable or unfavorable to the automobile industry. The automobile worker is entitled to organize and to strike, and he is entitled to strike for the purpose of obtaining better working conditions. The automobile worker is entitled to all the rights which are guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States." The statement concluded: "The automobile worker has no right to publicize his occupation of toil. The automobile worker is entitled to freedom of speech, and he is entitled to express his opinions, whether they be favorable or unfavorable to the automobile industry. The automobile worker is entitled to organize and to strike, and he is entitled to strike for the purpose of obtaining better working conditions. The automobile worker is entitled to all the rights which are guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States."

The Crisis in the C.P.S.U.

Although after a year of continuous propaganda of our Party and the Communist International among the Party members and the working masses, the reorganization of the C.P.S.U. has been completed, there are still many critical issues to be addressed. The Party must continue to fight for the Social Democratic wing of the working class, which has been weakened by the counter-revolutionary activities of the Mensheviks and the Bukharinists. The Party must also fight against the Mensheviks' strategy of electoral corruption and their undermining of the Party's revolutionary stance.

The Conference of the Int. Opposition

The conference will be held in the next few days, and the Party must prepare for all possible outcomes. The conference is expected to address the political and organizational issues facing the Party, as well as the need for a united front against the counter-revolutionary forces.

The letter concludes with a call to action, urging the Party members to remain steadfast in their beliefs and to continue the struggle for the revolution.

The New Turn of the Party on Trade Union Policy

By Ben Gitlow

In his October issue of the "Cover:" a long article entitled "The Seventy-Second Congress." The author, Ben Gitlow, discusses his opinion on the Seventy-Second Congress of the Socialist Labor Party. Gitlow takes a critical view of the congress, highlighting what he perceives as its failings and suggesting ways in which it could have been better. He argues that the party's leadership has failed to address certain issues and that the party's confrontational approach has hindered progress. Gitlow concludes by urging the party to move forward and adopt a more pragmatic approach to union policy.

The Record of the Past

In the article, Gitlow also critiques the decision of the party to split from the IAEP in 1914. He argues that this decision was not a matter of principle but rather a response to the IAEP's management. Gitlow suggests that by severing ties with the IAEP, the party lost an important ally and opportunity to strengthen its influence. He concludes that the party has failed to learn from this experience and that it should be more careful in its future decisions.

What Are Trade Unions?

The fundamental function of the party is to promote the interests of working people. Gitlow emphasizes the importance of trade unions as a means of achieving this goal. He argues that trade unions are essential to the well-being of workers and that they provide a platform for workers to voice their concerns and negotiate for better working conditions. Gitlow concludes by urging the party to remain committed to the development and support of trade unions.

The Fight in the Marine Union

LARRY MURPHY

Workers of the trade unions are fighting for the right to organize and bargain collectively. The fight has been waged on many fronts, and the workers are making progress. Gitlow highlights the importance of this struggle and urges the party to remain committed to supporting the workers in their fight.

Expulsion Policy in the Tulun Unions

The expulsion policy, which aims to maintain discipline within the party, is a contentious issue. Gitlow argues that the policy has been misapplied and that it is not an effective means of maintaining discipline. He suggests that the party should adopt a more nuanced approach to dealing with members who violate the party's rules.

The Communist Manifesto

The Communist Manifesto is a seminal work that has shaped the history of the labor movement. Gitlow argues that the party should adopt a more nuanced approach to interpreting the manifesto and using it as a guide for its actions. He suggests that the party should consider the context in which the manifesto was written and the historical circumstances in which it was written.

The Russian Revolution

The Russian Revolution was a pivotal event in the history of the labor movement. Gitlow argues that the party should adopt a more nuanced approach to understanding the revolution and its implications. He suggests that the party should consider the complex factors that contributed to the revolution and the varied perspectives of those who participated in it.

The Fight Against Reaction

The struggle against reaction is a central theme in the party's history. Gitlow argues that the party should adopt a more nuanced approach to understanding the struggle against reaction and its implications.
