CRISS IN FRENCH COMMUNIST MOVEMENT

"New Turn" Here - "Old Line" There

The Communist Party of America (CPA) has recently undergone a leadership change that could have significant implications for its future. The new leadership, led by a younger generation, is attempting to modernize the party and appeal to a younger audience. However, this change has been met with resistance from older members who see it as a departure from traditional communist values.

In a recent interview, CPA leaders expressed optimism about the party's future. They highlighted the need for the CPA to adapt to changing times and to connect with new audiences. They also emphasized the importance of international solidarity and the need to work with other left-wing groups to challenge capitalist systems.

However, the CPA's new leaders face significant challenges in implementing their vision. The party's traditional base is shrinking, and it is facing increased competition from other left-wing organizations. Moreover, the party is struggling to attract younger members who are disillusioned with traditional politics.

In conclusion, the CPA's new leadership has a significant opportunity to modernize the party and appeal to a new generation of activists. However, they will need to navigate the challenges of maintaining the party's socialist principles while adapting to changing times.

The Problem of Planning

by Jay Lovestone

It is a fact that some capitalist economists, engineers, editors, professors, advisors, experts, etc., who work to get money, have written books and articles, and have spoken at conferences on the question of planning. But most of these ‘experts’ are not economists at all. They do not have any knowledge or experience of the working conditions of the capitalist economy. They are not concerned with the problem of planning, but just with the problem of getting money.

There are many economists who do have some knowledge of planning. They are the economists who have worked in the field of planning, who have written books and articles, and who have spoken at conferences on the question of planning. They are not concerned with the problem of getting money, but just with the problem of planning.

We must distinguish between the two types of economists: those who are concerned with the problem of getting money, and those who are concerned with the problem of planning.

The problem of planning is a problem of the capitalist economy, and the solution to it is in the hands of the working class. The working class must take control of the economy and plan it for their own benefit.

In this article, I will try to answer some of the questions that the capitalists have raised about planning.

1. What is planning?
Planning is the process of determining the future economic activity of a society. It involves the making of decisions about what should be produced, how it should be produced, and how much should be produced.

2. Why is planning necessary?
Planning is necessary because it is impossible for the capitalist economy to work without it. The capitalist economy is too complex and changing to allow for spontaneous decisions to be made by the market forces. Planning is necessary to ensure that the economy is run in a way that is beneficial to society as a whole.

3. Who should do the planning?
The planning should be done by the working class, through their representatives in the government. The government should be elected by the working class and should be accountable to them.

4. How can planning be done?
Planning can be done through democratic processes, involving the participation of all members of society. This can be done through a democratic socialist government, which is elected by the working class and which is responsive to their needs.

5. What are the benefits of planning?
The benefits of planning are that it can prevent crises, such as recessions and depressions, and it can ensure that resources are used in a way that is beneficial to society as a whole.

6. What are the problems of planning?
The problems of planning are that it can lead to centralization of power and it can undermine the freedom of the individual.

7. Is planning possible?
Planning is possible, but it requires a major change in the way society is organized. It requires a shift from capitalism to socialism, where the working class is in control of the economy.

In conclusion, planning is a necessary part of any socialist economy. It is important to understand the benefits and problems of planning, and to work towards a socialist system where the working class is in control.

The recent furriers conference

by J. R.

1. The problem is that of the development of capitalist furriers in their own right and as a result of their own experience. The furriers are the capitalists, not the workers.

2. The furriers are the capitalists, not the workers. They are the ones who have the knowledge and experience of the economy. They are the ones who can plan the economy for the benefit of the working class.
