On the Discussion in the German Opposition

COMMUNISM AND CENTRISM

Statement of the C.P. Majority Group

In the last several months, a significant development has taken place in the German Communist Party. In a previous article, we discussed the events leading up to this development. Following the expulsion of the anti-fascists from the party, a new group of supporters, led by Carl Seeliger, has emerged. This group, which we will refer to as the "C.P. Majority Group," has been challenging the leadership of the party and has been influential in recent meetings of the party's Central Committee.

The C.P. Majority Group's main argument is that the party has been too focused on the issue of class struggle and has neglected the struggle against fascism. They argue that the party's policies have been ineffective in combating fascism and that the party has lost many of its members to the fascist movement. The C.P. Majority Group has also been critical of the party's leadership, accusing them of being too controlled by Stalinist ideology.

The C.P. Majority Group's position has gained support from a number of other groups within the party, and there is a growing movement within the party to challenge the leadership. This development is significant because it represents a challenge to the traditional left-wing dominance of the party and could lead to a significant change in the party's direction.

The C.P. Majority Group's position is not without its critics. Some members of the party have argued that the group is too radical and that their policies would lead to the party's isolation. Others have argued that the group's policies are too focused on fascism and that the party should be more focused on the struggle against capitalism.

Despite these criticisms, the C.P. Majority Group's position has gained significant support and could lead to a significant change in the party's direction. It remains to be seen whether the C.P. Majority Group will be able to carry out their policies or whether the party will remain under the control of the leadership.

The Paterson Strike and the Communists: A Test of Policy

by Ben Gillow

This is the first of a series of articles by Ben Gil-low on the industrial struggle between the Communists and the Paterson Strike Committee. The series is an attempt to give a clear, detailed account of the events leading up to the strike, and of the subsequent development of the struggle.

FOCUS ON THE PATERNOSTER STRIKE

The Paterson Strike Committee was formed in the spring of 1920, and its headquarters were located in Paterson, New Jersey. The committee was composed of members of the Communist Party of the United States, and its purpose was to organize a general strike in the Paterson area in order to gain higher wages and better working conditions for the workers.

ADDITIONS TO FAILURE

Paterson workers joined the communist movement in the winter of 1920 and the committee began to organize a general strike in the area. However, the strike was ultimately failed when the government intervened and used force to suppress it.

RECOGNITION OF SUCCESS

The strike was a failure, but it did result in some gains for the workers, including higher wages and better working conditions. The strikers were able to negotiate a settlement with the employers, and the strike was eventually ended.

THE TRUE STORY OF LABOR

The Paterson Strike was a significant event in the history of the American labor movement.

It demonstrated the power of the working class to organize and fight for improved working conditions. The strike also highlighted the role of the Communist Party in representing the interests of the working class.
