MIXTURE'S MERIT

"Two things the wise Christmas,"

JILL ROSS

A GOOD JOKE ON THE CARPENTER

Walking along the busy streets of Chicago, I noticed several shoe stores, two of which had signs that read "Merry Christmas." I thought about the negli-geance of these signs since it was not even November. I then thought that the businesses probably assumed that there were more people than usual due to the holidays.

Some took me—a distant city, and on the way through my mind, to the light of the setting sun as I gazed at the shoe store, I was reminded of something that I had always wanted to do:

I was confronted with the question: Why do people still buy shoes? Why not just get their shoes online?

Many people still prefer to go to shoe stores to try on shoes before buying them, and some even enjoy the social aspect of shopping. Perhaps people also prefer the experience of shopping in person, as it allows them to see and feel the shoes before purchasing them.

Regardless of the reason, it seems that the shoe industry is still doing well, despite the rise of online shopping. People still enjoy going to shoe stores and buying shoes in person.
WAGES AND PRICES

In common with editors of his strip, Henri Waterton of the New York Evening Post, who is native of London, England, and is one of the best known strips of today, recently published a strip entitled "The Doctor," which is a satire on the medical profession. It is a continuation of the earlier strip "The Doctor," which was published in the New York World-Telegram.

The strip is a reflection of the fact that the medical profession is one of the most lucrative professions in the world, and that the fees charged by doctors are often exorbitant. The strip satirizes the practice of doctors charging high fees for services that are not necessary, and the lack of regulation of the medical profession.

The strip is also a commentary on the fact that many people are unable to afford good medical care, and that the medical profession is often insensitive to the needs of the poor.

The strip is a reminder that the medical profession has a responsibility to provide care to everyone, regardless of their ability to pay, and that the government has a role to play in ensuring that everyone has access to basic health care.

SOCIALIST POSITION CONFIRMED

The Socialist Daily, a newspaper published in New York City, has published an article confirming the Socialist position on the economic system. The article states that the Socialist position is that the economic system should be based on the principles of cooperation and equality, and that the government should play a role in regulating the economy to ensure that everyone has access to basic necessities.

The Socialist Daily argues that the current economic system is based on the principles of competition and individualism, and that this has led to inequality and poverty. The Socialist Daily states that the government should regulate the economy to ensure that everyone has access to basic necessities, and that the government should provide a safety net for those who are unable to provide for themselves.

The Socialist Daily also argues that the current economic system is based on the principle of profit, and that this has led to greed and exploitation. The Socialist Daily states that the government should regulate the economy to ensure that profit is not the only goal, and that the government should prioritize the well-being of the people.

The Socialist Daily is a progressive newspaper that is dedicated to promoting the Socialist position on the economic system. The newspaper is published in New York City, and it is owned and operated by Socialists.

The Socialist Daily is committed to promoting the Socialist position on the economic system. The newspaper is published in New York City, and it is owned and operated by Socialists. The Socialist Daily is committed to promoting the Socialist position on the economic system. The newspaper is published in New York City, and it is owned and operated by Socialists.