THE CLAMOR FOR PEACE IN CAPITALIST SOCIETY

The Necessity of a Struggle Between Man and Man Has Practically Disappeared and With It the Moral Justification for Strife

PHILISTINE MORALITY OF CAPITALISM

By Isador Ladoff
Lessons in Economy for Men Who Work

The Triumph of the Working Class in the Struggle to Live Is the Abolition of Capitalism and the Suppression of All Classes

Surplus Value and Markets

Profit can Only be Sustained by Commodity Exchanges Limited by Wages

Mr. Charles H. Neil

Socialism has a vast and wondrous solution of the problem of surplus value. It means a new system of production, where the capitalist class will be done away with, and where the laboring class will be the owners of the means of production and will receive wages as their wages. The work of labor has been the basis of surplus value for the capitalist class, and any attempt to change the wage system will result in a revolution.

National Lecture Fund

The following resolution has been recommended by Mr. A. T. Brown for adoption by the National Social Democratic League:

Resolved, That the Social Democratic League be requested to start a national lecture fund for the purpose of meeting the increasing demand for educational work among the working classes, and that the League be authorized to engage the services of speakers and to provide the necessary expenses therefor.

The resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote.

In conclusion, I wish to express the hope that this movement will be successful, and that it will be carried out in a spirit of unity and harmony.

Mendel Mendels

The following proposition was made by Mr. A. T. Brown for consideration and action by the Social Democratic League:

Resolved, That the Social Democratic League be requested to form a committee to investigate the possibility of starting a national lecture fund for the purpose of meeting the increasing demand for educational work among the working classes.

The resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote.

In conclusion, I wish to express the hope that this movement will be successful, and that it will be carried out in a spirit of unity and harmony.

A SOCIALIST

Reprinted from Collier's, New York. 1903.

A Socialist, who had just arrived from Europe, said that he was one of the few who had not been corrupted by the spirit of internationalism.

"We are against the war, and we are for the people. We want to get the people out of the clutches of the capitalist class, and to establish a socialistic order of society where the people will be the owners of the means of production."

But when the trials of life began, and the capitalist class had asserted itself, he found that the people were not as helpless as he had thought.

"We are now in a position to show that the capitalist class is not so helpless as we thought," he said.

"Our first step is to organize a great labor union, and to teach the people that they have the power to organize themselves and to take control of the means of production."

With this in mind, he set out to work for the people, and to establish a new order of society where the people would be the owners of the means of production.

On the other hand, we have the capitalist class, who are for the private ownership of the means of production. They want to keep the means of production in the hands of a few rich people, and they are opposed to the idea of the people owning the means of production.

In conclusion, I wish to express the hope that this movement will be successful, and that it will be carried out in a spirit of unity and harmony.

On the Battle

As the sun and the conflict of the battle grow hotter, the struggle becomes more and more intense. The soldiers on both sides are fighting with all their might.

"We are fighting for our country," said one of the soldiers.

"And we are fighting for freedom," said another.

But the war is costing a great deal of money, and the people are suffering.

The question of the day was whether the Social Democratic Central Party should or should not be opposed to the war. The majority of the party present were in favor of opposing the war.

THE MONKEY AND THE BEEES
A Chapter in the History of Economics
By J. H. T. West

A thrist old monkey found some bees stinging honey in a hollow tree. In the time of year, a lot of thists would be out stinging the honey in the nats. The monkey came home and told his wife the news. His wife was so excited that she could hardly contain her delight.

"Oh, my husband!" she exclaimed. "What a wonderful discovery! We have found a new honey source!"

The monkey then explained the situation to his wife, and she was immediately excited. They both decided to go and collect all the honey they could find.

As they were gathering honey, they noticed that the bees were building a nest. The monkey was curious and asked the bees what they were doing.

"We are preparing a nest for our new baby," one of the bees explained.

"But we have no baby," the monkey said. "Why are you building a nest for a non-existent baby?"

"Because we are planning to have a baby," the bee replied. "And we need a nest to protect our future offspring from any harm that may come their way."

The monkey was impressed by the bees' foresight and wisdom. He realized that he had been thinking too small and that he needed to broaden his perspective.

"I have learned a valuable lesson," the monkey said. "I now understand the importance of planning for the future. Thank you for showing me this.

The monkey and his wife returned home with their new found knowledge and spread the word among their friends. Soon, everyone was planning for their future, and the society became more prosperous and stable.

In conclusion, the monkey and the bees taught us the importance of planning for the future. By doing so, we can avoid unnecessary hardships and achieve a better quality of life.
