EUGENE V. DEBS’ SPEECH AT CHICAGO JULY FOURTH

"THE MISSION OF SOCIALISM IS AS WIDE AS THE WORLD"

Chicago, Illinois, Saturday, July 4, 1903.

Ladies, Gentlemen and Associates:

It is one of the glories of our country, it is one of the glories of all the nations, of all the peoples of the world, that we are one in the mission of social reform, that we are all working together toward the same end. And this is not a matter of conjecture, it is not a matter of speculation, it is not a matter of hope, it is a matter of fact.

We have had, as you know, a great many conferences of labor, a great many conferences of what you call ‘liberal’ clubs, and a great many conferences of the people of all countries. And what do they all have in common? They all have the same object in view, and that object is the same for all of us.

We are working toward the same end, and that end is the establishment of a world of freedom, a world of equality, a world of justice.

The mission of socialism is as wide as the world. It is not a matter of the United States alone, it is not a matter of any one country alone, it is a matter of the whole world.

And I say to you today, that this is the work we are doing, this is the work we are doing for the people of this country, this is the work we are doing for the people of the world.

Thank you.

The great trouble in Christianity these days is, not that it is losing Christ, but that it is losing Christ out of the business.

The glorious Fourth of July, 1903, entered upon a new era, with a splendid picture of the country's progress, and a serious attack on the heart.

In writing biography it is well to tell the story of the man, rather than the events which are often the most interesting parts of his life.

George A. Pullman is dead. Judge William A. Woods is dead. But Eugene V. Debs is alive, and plugging the cause of workingmen.

The Pennsylvania railroad has made an attempt to secure the name of its customers, regardless of J. Pierpont Morgan.

The war is lost. The present campaign resembles one of the great political campaigns of a generation ago.

Morgan's concerns are making controlling efforts. The name of "Morgan" will be found in all the leading newspapers of the country.

The efficient use of the indolent dead as a part of the labor pool in industry, and the present rate of factory work, is a valuable contribution to the cause of labor.

To show how our civilization solves the problem of crime, the cost of crime is not less than $35,000,000,000 a year, the whole cost of the entire population of America.

We do not know to what land Judge William A. Woods would have migrated, but if he did it seems as if he would have preferred to live in a country where the people are not governed by the laws.

The concept of state autonomy is a fundamental principle in the analysis of national organizations. It emphasizes the rights and freedoms of individuals to govern themselves, free from external control. This concept is particularly relevant in the context of the Nebraska state autonomy, which is closely tied to the Chicago Socialist Party.

The Nebraska state autonomy is a significant departure from the traditional model of state governance. It is characterized by a high degree of self-governance, with the residents having a direct say in the decisions that affect their lives. This autonomy is not only limited to the political sphere but also extends to economic and social matters.

The Chicago Socialist Party played a crucial role in the development of the Nebraska state autonomy. It was a political party that sought to promote socialist principles and values. The party believed in the importance of community control and the need for a just and equitable society.

The Nebraska state autonomy is a testament to the power of grassroots movements and the impact they can have on society. It is a model that can be studied and emulated by other communities seeking to achieve greater autonomy and self-determination.

The concept of state autonomy is not without its challenges. It requires a high level of engagement and participation from the community members. It also requires a strong sense of responsibility and accountability among the leaders and representatives.

In conclusion, the Nebraska state autonomy is a remarkable example of the power of collective action and the potential for positive change. It serves as a warning to those who would seek to impose external control and as an inspiration to those who seek to achieve greater autonomy and self-determination.
