ROBERT BLATCHFORD ON CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS

Blatchford is often accused of "wishing class against class". As a Socialist, he was not seeking a division between classes, he was seeking a division between the "haves" and the "have-nots". He believed in the slogan "One man, one vote", and was a strong advocate of social and economic equality.

Blatchford's arguments were based on the idea that the rich and wealthy were exploiting the poor and that this exploitation was leading to social unrest and revolution. He believed that the only way to stop this was to educate the working class and to give them the tools to fight for their rights.

Blatchford's views were influential in the early years of the Labour Party, and his ideas continue to influence the debate on class consciousness and class struggle today.
