THE MISTAKE IN BELGIUM.

Since the tremendous "general strike" and the abortive revolution in Belgium, there has been a great deal said, newly by Socialist circles, in regard to the present condition of affairs in that country. The Belgian Socialist party has been defeated not only in the open street but also in the ballot box by the so-called "left" party. Some of their leaders have even gone so far as to claim that the revolution was a failure, which, of course, would have been an admission to defeat. However, it is not the intention of this article to discuss the cause of the revolution, but rather to analyze the result of the revolution, and what, if anything, we can learn from it.

The Belgian Revolution was a failure not because of lack of principles, but because of lack of organization. The Socialists were not united in their action, and even those who were united did not know what they were fighting for. The Socialists were not able to secure a majority of seats in the Belgian parliament, and this failure was due to the fact that they were divided into two parties.
