THE INEVITABLE WAR OF THE CLASSES.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.

In the present organization of society the character of government is determined by the distribution of wealth and power among the various classes. The working class, which comprises the large majority of the population, represents the working class of the world; the employer class, which is small in number but possesses vast wealth and power, represents the employer class of the world. The working class is the most numerous and the most powerful class; the employer class is the least numerous and the least powerful class.
ANCIENT TRADE UNIONS.]

Progress was only made by Sacrifice and Work.]

By George R. Calvert.

A recent letter from a correspondent in London, gives an account of a meeting of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union, held on December 27th, 1869. The meeting was called to order by J. C. Shute, the President, and was attended by a large number of members. The President then read a report on the state of the union, which showed a steady increase in the number of members. It was stated that the union had made great progress during the past year, and that it was now in a strong position to carry on its work effectively.

A motion was then passed unanimously that the Secretary be instructed to negotiate with the farmers for higher wages and better conditions of employment. This was a revolutionary step, and met with some opposition, but it was carried without a dissenting voice.

The meeting then adjourned to the following Friday for the purpose of discussing the question of organisation. It was resolved that a committee be appointed to prepare a scheme of organisation, and that the same be submitted to the members for their approval.

THE CLASS STRUGGLE.

[PICTURES FROM DENVER.]

What Helen Grey saw at the Western Labor Congress.

Helen Grey, the famous American socialist, recently visited Denver, Colorado, where she attended the Western Labor Congress. She was received with great enthusiasm, and her speeches were listened to with rapt attention. Her views on the class struggle were received with special interest, and her appeal to the workers to rise up and fight for their rights was met with a hearty response.

Grey's speeches were characterized by their directness and simplicity, and she succeeded in imparting to her audience a clear understanding of the issues involved. Her views on the need for solidarity and cooperation among the workers were particularly appreciated, and her call for a united front against the capitalist class was received with enthusiasm.

GENERAL NOTE.

The members of the Western Labor Congress are planning to demand a twelve-hour day for all workers. This is a radical measure, but the union is determined to press it until it is granted.

To know her was to love her. In her he saw a true leader, one who was not afraid to tackle the big issues, and who was determined to fight for what was right. She was a woman of great courage and conviction, and her influence was felt throughout the congress.

To learn more you must learn more.

WILMOT BUSINESS COLLEGE

Halifax, N.S.

Positions for graduates with offices.

Day School: $5.00 per month.

Night School: $4.00 per month.

English, History, and writing will be taught.

NEW HOME

Sewing Machine Office, 373 Third Street.

Anton Aucutt, Sales and Boarding House.

W. A. Feinberg, 200 Water Street.

Julius Lando, Optical Institute.

419 East Water St.

Union Barber Shops.

DOES CAPITAL PRODUCE WEALTH?

It used to be true that capital was the key to success. When people spoke of the value of a business, they meant its capital. But times have changed. Today, it is said that capital is not the only key to success. People now say that hard work and perseverance are just as important.

It is true that capital can be very useful in starting a business. But it is also true that hard work and perseverance are necessary to keep the business going. Without hard work and perseverance, even the best capital cannot guarantee success.

For example, imagine a business that is started with a large amount of capital. The business is running smoothly, and everything seems to be going well. But then, disaster strikes. The business suffers a major setback, and it seems like all hope is lost. At this point, the business owners must rely on their hard work and perseverance to keep the business alive. Without hard work and perseverance, the business will most likely fail.

In conclusion, it is clear that capital is not the only key to success. Hard work and perseverance are just as important, if not more so. People should remember this when they think about the value of capital.

A House Without A Dictionary Is Truthless Indeed. Can’t afford to own such a rare find. Offer of a big bulky dictionary.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY!

For the best time in your life:

ATTEND THE

GRAND RALLY, PICNIC AND BALL.

IS THEiplinary.

TENTH WARS BRANCH, S. D. P.

AT

WEST SIDE UNION PARK

SUNDAY, JULY 6, 1902.

Admission, 10 cents. Don’t forget the date.

BY THE WAY.

You can’t afford to own such a rare find. Offer of a big bulky dictionary. WEBSTER’S DICTIONARY!