WHAT IS MEANT BY SOCIAL REVOLUTION—BY KARL KAUTSKY

Socialist revolution is an event of exceptional importance in the political life of the world. It is not a mere political upheaval as the reactionaries believe, for it is a transformation of the economic structure of the state; it is not a struggle for the change of form of the state, but a struggle for the change of the state itself; and it is not a question of putting one man or another in the position of master, but a question of removing this position from the hands of the master and placing it in the hands of the workers. The socialist revolution is therefore a revolution of an entirely different character from the other revolutions that have taken place in history. It is a revolution that aims at the destruction of the capitalist system and the establishment of a socialist society. It is a revolution that seeks to overthrow the existing order of things and to create a new order that is based on the principles of social justice and equality. It is a revolution that aims at the transformation of society from a class society to a classless society, from a society of exploitation to a society of cooperation, from a society of inequality to a society of equality. It is a revolution that seeks to establish a society in which all the means of production are owned by the community, in which the workers are the masters of the means of production, and in which the fruits of their labor are shared equally by all.

The socialist revolution is a revolution of unparalleled magnitude, a revolution that is destined to change the course of human history. It is a revolution that is destined to bring about a new world, a world in which the workers are the masters of their fate, a world in which the fruits of their labor are shared equally by all. It is a revolution that is destined to establish a society that is based on the principles of social justice and equality, a society in which all the means of production are owned by the community, in which the workers are the masters of the means of production, and in which the fruits of their labor are shared equally by all.
