The German Social Democratic Congress.

By Victor L. Berger.

The German Social Democratic Congress, originally formed of two large divided and hostile camps—the Social Democrats and the Eisenraden (Marxists), The Social Democrats were the more far-reaching in their aims and more sympathetic to the working man, while the Eisenraden were more of the old school, but they fought for their own principles and perfectly understood the working man’s point of view. The present Congress, however, is not divided into two camps, but into two large opposing forces, the Social Democrats and the Marxists. The Social Democrats are more in favor of a social revolution and are more opposed to the present order of things, while the Marxists are more in favor of a political revolution and are more opposed to the present political order.

Now when the Social Democratic movement was young, it was characterized by the masses of the people. But the Social Democrats, being more far-reaching in their aims, were always in the forefront of the movement. In 1890, when the Social Democrats were divided into two large camps, one of which was the Marxists and the other the Social Democrats, the latter were always the more far-reaching in their aims and more sympathetic to the working man. But the Social Democrats, being more of the old school, were more in favor of a social revolution and more opposed to the present order of things.

The Marxists, on the other hand, were always more in favor of a political revolution and more opposed to the present political order. The Social Democrats were more in favor of a social revolution and more opposed to the present social order.

The Marxists, on the other hand, were more in favor of a political revolution and more opposed to the present political order. The Social Democrats were more in favor of a social revolution and more opposed to the present social order.

The Social Democrats were more in favor of a social revolution and more opposed to the present social order.

The Marxists, on the other hand, were more in favor of a political revolution and more opposed to the present political order. The Social Democrats were more in favor of a social revolution and more opposed to the present social order.

The Social Democrats were more in favor of a social revolution and more opposed to the present social order.
CAPITALISM'S PICKET LINE!

A MARVEL OF PERSUASION, CAJOLERY, AND INTIMIDATION. BUT TRUTH AND RIGHT WILL PREVAIL IN SPITE OF IT!

The Editor sends Capitalism by leaving blank recommenders lying about Socialist, and seizing upon opportunities against new ideas and agitations for a better system of society. He realizes that the people will not be convinced by capitalistic tactics, and therefore uses every means possible to prevent the spread of Socialist ideas.

One of the stock questions that Capitalism uses is this: How much will they get in power? The answer is: nothing. It is not likely that they will ever be brought to power. The people are not ready for them, and they do not want them. They know that Capitalism is bad, and they do not want to be governed by it.

And in spite of all this, the Socialist movement is surging around the globe! The world is becoming Socialist, and Capitalism is losing ground.

HALF HOURS IN THE HERALD SANCTUARY.

There is no going to the following letter which is written from the Herald's sanctum, and posted to the editor. It is written by the editor himself, and it contains some very interesting information. The editor is a Socialist, and he is writing from his sanctum, which is the center of his operations.

The editor is a Socialist, and he is writing from his sanctum, which is the center of his operations.

How about that $30.00 bill? Or are you just one of those people who always have to have the latest thing? Can you afford it? Can you afford to spend $30.00 on a book? That's what the Socialist is asking. He is asking if you can afford to spend $30.00 on a book.

What about the Socialist? He is just one of those people who always have to have the latest thing. He is always looking for the latest thing, and he is always spending money on it. He is always trying to get the latest thing, and he is always spending money on it.

And in spite of all this, the Socialist movement is surging around the globe! The world is becoming Socialist, and Capitalism is losing ground.
