An American Congress a Cesspool of Capitalism.—A Timely and Notable Exposure!

The Social Democratic Herald, published in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on November 7, 1902, offered a critical perspective on American politics and the role of Congress. The article highlights the contrast between the ideals of peace and the reality of political maneuvering. It also critiques the nature of American capitalism, suggesting that it is a cesspool where the true interests of the people are neglected. The article calls for a more equitable and just society, urging readers to question the status quo and demand better governance. The Social Democratic Herald was a leading voice of the socialist movement in the United States, advocating for workers' rights and a more democratic form of government.
American Labor to Gain by It's Trials. -- The Capitalist Oppression Will Open It's Eyes.

The legal inequities, glaring wrongs, and injustices of the old order of society will be changed by the actions of the trials. The movement of the times is strong and steady and will not be checked or halted by the slightest difficulties. The movement is not only of the people but of the times and the times are strong and steady.

There is nothing more so than the movement of the times. It is a movement of the people and it is the people who are moving the times.

The movement of the times is the movement of the people and it is the people who are moving the times.
