PUFFY GOES DOWN UNDER COMBINED Assault.

Mrs. Wilbur, Mrs. H. D. Willard and Mrs. J. H. Williams, the three women who made a venture into the political field in connection with the Wisconsin State Democratic Convention at Madison, were flown to Chicago on the combined assault of the Republican organization, the State Republican party and the women's club movement.

The three women were trekked to Chicago by Samuel G. Fleischman, publisher of the Chicago Inter Ocean, who is a supporter of the New York Tribune, a newspaper that supported William Jennings Bryan.

Mrs. Wilbur was the first to arrive in Chicago, followed by Mrs. H. D. Willard and Mrs. J. H. Williams. They were met at the airport by a large group of well-dressed women who greeted them warmly. The women then proceeded to a nearby hotel where they were entertained by Chicago's leading women.

Mrs. Wilbur, Mrs. H. D. Willard and Mrs. J. H. Williams were all active in the women's club movement and were known for their support of progressive causes. Their arrival in Chicago was seen as a threat to the Republican establishment, who were determined to stop their efforts.

The three women were later joined by other supporters of Bryan, who also arrived in Chicago. Together, they planned to launch a campaign against the Republican candidates.

The campaign was expected to be a major victory for Bryan, who was running for the presidency in 1896. The women's support was seen as a crucial element in his success.

The women's club movement was a powerful force in the late 19th century, and their support was instrumental in the success of Bryan's campaign.

In conclusion, the women's club movement played a significant role in the political landscape of the late 19th century, and their support for Bryan was a key factor in his victory.

VICTORY IN MILWAUKEE COURT.

The Milwaukee Social-Democratic Herald, the first and only radical newspaper, published in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on January 20, 1905, under the editorship of Judge Edward E. Boyer, stated the importance of organized labor, and declared that its success in America was due to the spirit of revolt and revolution. The newspaper's position was based on the belief that the struggle for justice and freedom was a moral duty of all citizens.

The Herald was published by the Social-Democratic Party of Milwaukee, and its main objective was to promote the interests of the working class and to fight against the social and economic inequalities that existed in America. The newspaper was devoted to the cause of workers' rights and the need for a radical change in the political and social system.

The Herald's articles were written by a group of progressive activists who were committed to the idea of social reform and the struggle for workers' rights. The newspaper's editorials focused on the importance of organizing workers and the need to fight against the exploitation of the working class.

The Herald's success was due to its clear and principled stance on social issues, and its commitment to the cause of workers' rights. The newspaper's articles were widely read and were influential in shaping the political landscape of Milwaukee.

The Herald's legacy continues to inspire social activists and radicals in America, who continue to fight for social justice and freedom.

The Social-Democratic Herald is a testament to the power of the working class and the importance of organized labor in the struggle for a better society. Its articles continue to be read and studied by activists and radicals around the world, who are committed to the idea of social reform and the need for a radical change in the political and social system.
