The Latest From Russia

by Victor L. Berger

WONDROUS story of Bolshevism is sweeping across Russia. What for the last two or three years has been contemptuously called "Bolshevism" is today being received everywhere with great enthusiasm. It appears that the Russian Social Democrats, after a series of defeats, have apparently given up their old tactics in favor of a new, more energetic and more effective method of propaganda. The old "Bolshevik" system of political action, which consisted in occasional strikes and demonstrations, is now being replaced by a mass movement of popular education and agitation.

The explanation for this change is to be found in the recent successes of the Bolsheviks. They have been able to mobilize the masses of the people, to win them to their cause, and to make them the active agents in the struggle for the socialist revolution. The Bolsheviks have been able to show that they can organize a strong and effective party, that they can win the support of the workers and peasants, and that they can carry out their program of redistribution of wealth and power.

The Bolsheviks have been able to demonstrate that they are capable of organizing a mass movement, and that they can use the machinery of the state to their own advantage. They have been able to show that they can use the state apparatus to spread their ideas, to suppress their opponents, and to control the lives of the workers and peasants. THE CULTURE OF CAPITALISM
WHAT THE NINETEENTH CENTURY STOOD FOR, AND IT'S POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE

The nineteenth century was the century of capitalism. In its fullness, the century might be called the age of the market, the market as we know it, the market based on the labor market and the commodity market. The century has shaped the world we live in, and it has left its mark on every dimension of human activity.

But what has been the role of the market? What has been its impact on society? What has been its effect on the politics of the day? In this issue, we will look at some of the key issues of the nineteenth century, and we will try to understand how the market has shaped our world.

FOR OUR NEW READERS.

This country is made up of working men, both industrial and agricultural, but tied by the weakest class, which is commonly known as "the wage-earner". For the past four years or more the interests of the laborer and capital have been in conflict, and we are rapidly approaching the greatest crisis the nation has ever known. The result of this struggle will be determined by the strength and organization of the workers. The issues involved are too serious to be treated lightly.

The labor movement is not a temporary phenomenon, but a permanent one. It is essential that workers organize and unite to fight for their rights. The success of the movement depends on the willingness of workers to stand together and fight for their共同利益.

Program of International Social-Democracy:

1. Education of the laboring classes in the truths of Social-Democracy and Liberalism.
2. Formation of labor unions and the promotion of working-class legislation.
3. Promotion of the study of economics and politics among the working class.
4. Provision for the advancement of the working class through education and training.
5. Promotion of the scientific study of the working class and the prevention of exploitation.

EDITORIAL ETCHINGS.

New York citizens are yielding a bid for public opinion by trying to force the question of local government, and in a city which has a long tradition of urbanism, the issue is a novel one. The city's population is increasing rapidly, and the need for more efficient government is becoming apparent. The battle is being fought in the streets, and the outcome will have far-reaching consequences.

The side of life has been one of the determining factors in the current elections. The cost of living is high, and the working class is feeling the pinch. In this atmosphere, a radical change in the status quo is desirable.

New York citizens are demanding a better government. They are tired of the old system, and they want a government that will work for the benefit of the people. The issue is a test of the community's will, and the outcome will determine the course of local politics.
