President A. J. Furlong of the Bandwagon noted that there was a great appearance of support for the Bandwagon legislative body by sending them their views on local issues. The Bandwagon, like all good Illinois bands, has a strong tradition of giving the people what they want—good, sound, and thorough government. As a result, the legislative committee of the Bandwagon has decided to continue the petition drive. The Bandwagon will continue to send petitions to all members of the legislature, and we will hold a memorial service on the Bandwagon's behalf to show our appreciation for the support we have received.

The Bandwagon’s petition drive will continue, and we will hold a memorial service on the Bandwagon's behalf to show our appreciation for the support we have received. The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.

The Bandwagon is a strong organization, and we will continue to fight for what we believe in. We are confident that the Bandwagon will continue to succeed in the years to come. We are proud to be a part of the Bandwagon, and we will continue to work hard to ensure its success in the future.
Child Labor in the United States!

...who has seen the misery of man has no notion of the wretchedness of woman. But who has seen the wretchedness of woman has no notion of the misery of man.

How long—Thus long, O foundation will the "Temple of the God, a Temple without a pillar!"

[Image 0x0 to 1368x973]
ORGANIZED LABOR CONTINUED FROM PAGE 5

The Four Orphans

A TALE OF TWENTIETH CENTURY SLAVES

By Victor L. Berger

Insurers who are offering policies to the families of the orphans of the Second World War must be on the alert to guard against any deception that may be carried out by some of the more unscrupulous companies. The following story is one that illustrates the need for such vigilance.

The Four Orphans

The story begins in a small town in the Midwest. There were four orphaned children, all between the ages of five and ten. The father of the family had been killed in action during the war, and the mother had died of a heart attack shortly thereafter. The children were left with no relatives and no means of support.

The town had a small orphanage, but it was full and had no room for the new orphans. The local newspaper, the Social-Democratic Herald, published an article about the children's plight, and a local businessman, Mr. John Smith, stepped forward to offer his help.

Mr. Smith offered to pay for the children's education and living expenses, but only if they agreed to work for him for a period of five years. The children, who had been raised without any sense of responsibility, eagerly agreed.

Mr. Smith sent the children to a nearby city, where he had a business empire. The children worked long hours for very low wages, and were often subjected to harsh treatment. The local Social-Democratic Herald reported on the children's plight, but no one seemed to care.

Finally, after five years, the children approached Mr. Smith and demanded their freedom. Mr. Smith refused, and the children were forced to work for him for another five years. The Social-Democratic Herald continued to report on the children's plight, but no one seemed to care.

Finally, after ten years, the children approached Mr. Smith again. This time, they were determined to be free. With the help of the Social-Democratic Herald, they were able to expose Mr. Smith's exploitation, and the children were finally able to take control of their lives.

The story shows the importance of social justice and the need for vigilance in the face of exploitation. The Social-Democratic Herald played a vital role in this story, and continues to do so today.